

Dr. McCalden assumes new position at the med school

Lynne D. Williams, medical school information
July 29, 1991

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Thomas A. McCalden, Ph.D., has assumed the position of assistant dean for research for the University of Nevada School of Medicine. In this capacity, Dr. McCalden will work with EDAWN, focusing on economic development in the field of biomedical sciences. His primary responsibility will be to apply the school's academic and scientific research to solve problems in the business sector.

Dr. McCalden earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at Queens University of Belfast, Ireland, and his doctorate from Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa. Prior to coming to Nevada, he was scientific director of pharmacology at Liposome Technology Inc., in Menlo Park, CA.