

Dr. Goodman receives Robert Wood Johnson grant

Lynne D. Williams, medical school information
June 29, 1989

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

One of six Health Policy Fellowships awarded nationally has gone to School of Medicine faculty member Dr. Philip Goodman by The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Dr. Goodman, who is an associate professor of internal medicine at the University of Nevada School of Medicine, will spend a year in Washington D.C., where he will be assigned to work in the offices of senators and representatives who are dealing with health matters.

The Fellowships are awarded on a competitive basis to outstanding mid-career professionals working in academic health settings. The program is designed to prepare faculty members for leadership roles in health activities at all levels.

Dr. Goodman is the nationally recognized authority on the technology assessment of computerized thermography, having written statistical standards that are used throughout the country.