Medical student works with local doctor

ELKO-- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student begins working with Dr. Cal Lewis this month.

Senior medical student James Bakerink begins a four-week stay with Dr. Lewis, a long-time local family practice physician next week.

Bakerink, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Lewis through Feb. 11 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
