FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

A University of Nevada School of Medicine professor has been named as an editor of the prestigious Journal of Physiology.

According to the chairman of the Journal board, Nick Standen, Kenton M. Sanders, Ph.D., Professor and Chairman of Physiology, received unanimous approval from the board to serve as an editor for a term of seven years. In this capacity, Dr. Sanders will choose peer reviewers, edit, and make final decisions about publication for the Journal. Occasionally he also will be called upon to offer second opinions for other editors.

Dr. Sanders, who earned his doctorate in physiology from the University of California, Los Angeles, has been with the School of Medicine since 1982. He has received several awards for distinguished scholarship and research, and serves as the principal investigator on a $7 million Program Project Grant from the National Institutes of Health.
