Medical student works with local doctor

A University of Nevada School of Medicine student began working with Dr. Robin Titus this month in Wellington.

Senior medical student Paul Nault began a four-week stay with Dr. Titus, a local family practice physician, Sept. 26.

Nault, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Titus through Oct. 21 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
