Medical student works with local doctor

BOULDER CITY-- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student will begin working with Dr. Joseph Hardy this month.

Senior medical student David Slatterly will begin a four-week stay with Dr. Hardy, a long-time local family practice physician, this month.

Slatterly, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Hardy beginning Feb. 15 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
