Medical student works with local doctor

BOULDER CITY-- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student began working with Dr. Warren Smith this month.

Senior medical student James Zebrack began a four-week stay with Dr. Smith, a long-time local family practice physician, Nov. 21.

Zebrack, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Smith through Dec. 16 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
