Medical student works with local doctor

FALLON--University of Nevada School of Medicine senior medical student Richard Jones began a four-week stay with Dr. Gregory Valentine, a local family practice physician, this month.

Jones, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Valentine to learn more about the practice of rural medicine beginning March 15.

The student's rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
