Medical student works with local doctor

FALLON-- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student will begin working with Dr. Tim Hockenberry next month.

Senior medical student Lori Anderson will begin a four-week stay with Dr. Hockenberry, a local family practice physician, this month.

Anderson, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. She will work side-by-side with Dr. Hockenberry beginning March 15 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
