Medical student works with local doctor

BATTLE MOUNTAIN--University of Nevada School of Medicine senior medical student Stella Horton began a four-week stay with Dr. John Peters, a local family practice physician, this month.

Horton, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. She will work side-by-side with Dr. Peters to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The student's rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
