Medical student works with local doctor

A University of Nevada School of Medicine student will begin working with Dr. Robin Titus this month in Wellington.

Senior medical student Lyn Knoblock will begin a four-week stay with Dr. Titus, a local family practice physician, April 8.

Knoblock, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. She will work side-by-side with Dr. Titus through May 3 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
