FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

A new director has been named for Southern Nevada Area Health Education Center (AHEC) at the University of Nevada School of Medicine. Rose M. Yuhos, R.N., who has been serving as the center's program specialist and the associate director of the AIDS Education and Training Center (ETC) program in southern Nevada, has been appointed director. According to Roger Buehrer, chair of the southern center board of trustees, she assumes the position held by Gayle Cluck for the past six years. Cluck is moving to Pennsylvania.

As director of the Southern Nevada AHEC office, Yuhos will administer all educational, fiscal, and administrative activities for the nonprofit corporation. AHEC provides training and information resources to healthcare professionals, including physicians, nurses, social workers and emergency medical technicians in rural and under-served communities in southern Nevada. The agency also actively works on the recruitment of Nevada students into the various healthcare fields.

Yuhos earned her nursing diploma from Akron City Hospital's Idabele Firestone School of Nursing in Ohio. She is currently enrolled and near completion of her bachelor's degree in healthcare administration at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.
