Medical student works with local doctor

BULLHEAD CITY- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student will begin working with Dr. Nathan Beneze this month.

Senior medical student David Cameron will begin a four-week stay with Dr. Beneze, a local family practice physician, Jan. 29. Cameron, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Beneze through Feb. 23 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine. Dr. Beneze is a member of a large group of rural physicians who open their practices to educate medical students.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
