Medical student works with local doctor

FALLON-- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student begins working with Dr. James Hockenberry this month.

Senior medical student Mike Lepire begins a four-week stay with Dr. Hockenberry, a local family practice physician, Feb. 12.

Lepire, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Hockenberry to learn more about the practice of rural medicine through March 8.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
