FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Barrick Goldstrike Mines, Inc., one of Nevada's leading gold mining companies, is donating $100,000 to the Landra Reid Center for Women's Studies, which will be housed in the expanded medical library and education building being planned by the School of Medicine on its Reno campus. Last year, Barrick donated $1.3 million to charities and projects in Nevada communities.

Barrick employs more than 2,000 people in Nevada, primarily in the communities of Elko and Beatty; and, according to Vice President and General Manager Don Prah, "welcomes the opportunity to assist the work of the University of Nevada School of Medicine with this donation to the Landra Reid Center for Women's Health Studies. We are pleased that a Nevada University is one of 40 institutions participating in the national Women's Health Initiative, and we are proud to provide our support."

Landra Reid is a long-time advocate of women's issues, particularly women's health, which is why the school chose to name the Center in her honor.

Barrick is the second largest gold producer in the world, with 11 producing mines in Peru, Chile, and Nevada.
