Medical student works with local doctor

FALLON-- A University of Nevada School of Medicine student will begin working with Dr. Tim Hockenberry next month.

Senior medical student Paul Herman will begin a four-week stay with Dr. Hockenberry, a long-time local family practice physician, this month.

Herman, along with all fourth-year students, is required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Hockenberry beginning Dec. 7 to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

Another local physician, Dr. Gregory Valentine, also participates in this program and recently completed working with student Barbara Zimmerman Nov. 20.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
