Medical student works with local doctor

TONOPAHA-Dr. Brian Callister is currently working with a University of Nevada School of Medicine student.

Senior medical student Brady Englestead began a four-week stay with Dr. Callister, a local family practice physician, this month.

Englestead, along with all fourth-year students, are required to complete a month-long stay with a family practice physician in rural Nevada. He will work side-by-side with Dr. Callister to learn more about the practice of rural medicine.

The students' rural rotation is coordinated by the School of Medicine's Nevada Area Health Education Center program.
