LIVESTOCK GRAZING

Livestock grazing has been yearlong since priority use was established. During the late spring, summer, and early fall, livestock are in the upper elevational areas of the allotment near Big Timber Springs, Jaybird Spring, and Crystal Spring, all of which are in the Toiyabe National Forest. As the temperatures cool down in the late fall - early winter, the livestock trail down into the lower elevational desert area near the Owens Waterhaul which is managed by the Bureau of Land Management. No livestock grazing occurs in the Johnnie - Grapevine Spring area. Maps three and four show areas of livestock and wild horse use and location of waters.

Wild Horses and Burros

The Mt. Stirling Allotment is located within the historic Mt. Stirling and Last Chance Herd Management Areas. Based on the 1988 census, approximately 35 wild horses and 50 wild burros are within the Mt. Stirling HMA while another 50 burros are in the Last Chance HMA year-round. It should be remembered that these population levels are not set and may vary due to the proximity of the Mt. Stirling - Wallace Canyon Herd Use Area and seasonal variations in temperatures and quality of feed. Population levels in the two herd management areas may triple at times due to seasonal migrations. Wild horse and burro use occurs throughout the allotment. However, the majority of horses and burros are found in the Johnnie - Grapevine Springs area. Small bands of burros and horses have been seen in the Stirling Mine area.
