ALL honor to the basket-ball team. By their victory over Stanford and their excellent showing against California, they have athletically at least materially advanced us in the estimation of all. Moreover, such a showing brings into prominence not only our athletics, but the University in general.

DID you have a purpose in coming to the University? Not a mere idea, but a strong purpose that will make you master of something some day. Fix your purpose.

A GREAT source of information to the general student outside of regular work is that of reading, which, used with judgment, is a great benefit, but it may become a positive detriment. We are too prone to select the interesting at the expense of the profitable. It is not the one who reads most, but rather he who uses the best judgment in the selection of his reading matter that derives the greatest benefit. One of our exchanges gives three questions for deciding the worth of a novel. Is it true to nature? Does it emphasize the good in human nature rather than the evil? Is it helpful?

IN perusing the columns of our exchanges we notice that much space in the editorial and other departments is given up to matters foreign to college life—political and national questions, for instance. The benefits of a careful study of these questions are many, but we do not think that lengthy discussions on such topics should have a place in the editorial department of a college journal. The majority of such discussions are crude at the best and the time should be given over to affairs that directly concern the student. The work, though possibly humbler, is more appreciated.

DO we always realize our duty toward the University? Probably the first and highest aim of the college is to fit a man to perform intelligently and conscientiously his duties as a citizen. The college has been compared to a government. It has a presiding officer, and its teams and societies are what Congress and the army and navy are to the nation. What good citizen would think of refusing to support the army which represents and stands up for him? As the prime duty of the good citizen is to support his government, so the loyal student should give his aid to all undertakings which affect directly or indirectly the institution of which he forms a part.

THE University Dramatic Club is on its feet again and it is to be sincerely hoped that a lack of interest will not, as before, kill the project. This is about the only means we have of clearing our athletic debt, and no stone should be left unturned to make it an unqualified success.

MY GRANDMOTHER'S SAMPLES.

Great authors have written, great poets have sung
Of the pleasures in days that are fled;
The time intervening has a mist o'er them flung
Till round them new radiance is spread.
They've told of their homes, their hills, and their vales,
Their mountains, and swift running streams,
Of trees gently fanned by light summer gales
And how they oft see them in dreams.
They've sung of the curl from the dear baby's head;
Of the cradle it presses no more;
Of the happy old homestead; and, yes, they have sung
Of the cracks in the old kitchen floor,
Of the old oaken bucket that hung in the well
With its life-giving blessings for all;
But one thing's neglected, of that I will tell,
The old samples that hung on the wall.

I MUST ask my readers to go back with me to my old home in New England while I tell them about my grandmother's samples that hung on the wall; and I may begin by saying that the description which will apply to one of these homes in the country districts will apply to many. It is true that there are stately homes in New England as well as the old, but these are the exceptions and not the rule.

Let us consider that our visit is to be made late in June, the month of roses, for then are her rugged hills and intervening vales seen at their best. Everywhere the grass is green; from the leafy boughs of overhanging trees floats the sweet song of birds; the air is filled with balmy odors. As we pass along the quiet, country street, we cannot but wonder why so many of New England's sons and daughters turn their backs upon so fair a land and seek homes in the bustle and excitement of the great city, or even among the sagebrush covered hills of our own Nevada; but we cannot wonder that they carry with them loving memories of their old homes. Here is a quiet farm-house, just far enough back from the road to admit of its having a patch of a yard on each side of the front door. This yard was the garden spot of our grandmothers, and its cultivation afforded them one of their chief pleasures. Here were to be found in all their glory, roses, the old fashioned cinnamon and damask; the syringa, or mock orange, so sweet to view and smell; sweet-williams, pinks, poppies and peonies, the flaunting tiger lily, hollyhocks, golden catliopies, morning bride, and many other flowers that we now consider old fashioned, but none prettier than which are to be found.

Raise the knocker and rouse the echoes loud and clear, otherwise we shall not be heard, for the front part of the house is little used and the good woman and her daughters are sure to be in the kitchen, or milk room or perhaps out in the yard placing the shining pans in a row to dry in the sunshine. Ushered into the "sanctum sanctorium," the best parlor, the first thing we notice is the peculiar, half-stifling odor, as if the air had been long unchanged; which is likely to be the true state of the case, for the room with its gay-colored ingrain carpet, its old-fashioned cane seat, or perhaps the still worse slippery horse hair, furniture, is by far too good for every-day use. Our hostess will step to the window and first raise the paper shade, and then the window itself, through which comes a grateful breath of soft June air, swaying the inner curtain of muslin and lace, and we, taking advantage of the light then let in, will take a glance around. The prim neatness everywhere, not a speck of dust visible, the tidies arranged with mathematical precision, books and trinkets on the centre table ditto, the bunch of asparagus in the fire-place, the old-fashioned pictures on the wall, all give us a queer sensation; and we long to be out again in the shade of the great trees that stand near the gate, or better still, out in the orchard listening to the hum of bees or song of birds.

The pictures, you will notice, are not of the highest style of art, old-fashioned prints in colors, with perhaps a fairly good steel engraving among them, or perhaps one of those abominations, a wreath of worsted, or of feather flowers, carefully covered with glass, framed and placed on the wall. What will most attract your attention, if from no other reason, for its peculiar ugliness alone, is a something hanging in the place of honor directly over the middle of the mantle piece; draw near and examine at leisure, and what do you see? A rectangular frame of some 18 by 20 inches, inclosing a glass-covered piece of coarse, unbleached canvas, or that is what it looks like. In the centre of this is something intended to represent a tombstone, over which a weeping willow droops its long and graceful boughs. Near the monument stands the figure of a woman; she also is weeping, but from under one corner of the handkerchief, with which she is wiping away her tears, she is evidently gazing sadly at the inscription on the stone; said inscription being, "Sacred to the Memory" of somebody or other, and its letters being out of all proportion with respect to size, to the monument itself. Above this moving representation is a text from the Holy Scripture; on either side is placed a stanza of poetry, or a verse from the Psalms, while underneath, extending clear across the canvas, is the alphabet done in script, including both the capital and the small letters, followed by the Roman numerals, and closing with this legend, or something similar:

"This Sampler was begun March the 18th, 1797, and finished June the 25th, 1800, and is the work of Betsey Maria Tyler, aged 16 years."

Understand that all this was done by the skillful hand of some young girl, and represents many, many long hours of patient, painstaking work with the needle. Stitches of every known variety are to be found in perfection here, and the sampler itself was considered as an indication of the skill and taste in needle-work of the maker.

From an artistic point of view it is as ugly as need be, but let us look deeper, beyond the work itself, into the creator's mind, and this faded old sampler may seem as a text for a sermon, indicating, as it does, the budding of the artistic instinct in woman. The 19th century is fast drawing to its close; a marvelous record it has left upon the "sands of time!" It found in the United States but the feeble beginning of a republic that now, at the close, ranks among the grandest nations on the globe, and may almost, like the mother country England, make the proud boast that on its possessions the bright sun never sets. It found us a nation in its infancy; it will leave us as a nation in the glorious prime of manhood. No need for me to recapitulate the changes that have been wrought in this century of growth and progress. Of the improvement made in every department of the world's industry, of the gigantic strides made by science, of the caged lion steam made to do the work of man and beast; of the lightning, the thunderbolt of the ancients, tamed, chained and controlled, and made to do man's bidding; of the many labor-saving devices, that while they lessen labor in one direction, furnish employment in their own manufacture; of the increase of culture, refinement, intelligence, luxury, all those things which add to the comforts and pleasures of existence; these are so well known to all that a reference to them will suffice. But of the change in the place occupied by woman in all civilized nations, more especially in our own, let me speak, for in no direction is the revolution that a century has made more striking than in the social, intellectual, industrial and even the political status of woman.

Let us glance for a moment over the ground formerly occupied by her, and I think you will agree with me that the contrast between the quaint old sampler of our grandmother's days and the grand paintings of Rosa Bonheus, or Elizabeth Thompson, or the chiseled statues of Vinnie Ream Hoxie, is not greater than is that existing between woman at the beginning of the 19th century and woman at its close.

Where at its beginning and for long, long after, was she told to seek her proper sphere? In the home, rocking the cradle, raising the children, providing for the multifarious wants of the household, always ready to answer the beck and call of each and every member of the same, but especially and particularly to administer to the wants of the master of the house, that lord of creation. If by chance she was too ugly, or homely—to use our common word—too simple or too sensible to find a husband and a home, what avenues of employment were open to her, where lay her proper sphere? She might teach, providing she could get a school and some man did not want it worse than she did, and she would, perhaps, receive payment at the munificent rate of 75 cents or $1 a week, and the privilege of boarding round. When help was scarce and work driving, she might go into some neighbor's family, where she would be treated as half-help, half-friend, and be less than half-paid. If she had been fortunate in her youth and had learned the art of tailoring, or of dressmaking, her services were sure to be in almost constant demand, for home-made garments were then the rule, and would in time wear out. As a milliner, too, she might find almost steady employment; and at weaving, spinning, carding wool, or flax, she might be forever busy and not step out of the sphere allotted to her by man. The right to earn her own living and often that of dependent little ones has never been denied her, though often, and for long, and even yet in many cases, this "right" has been one of weary struggles against the foolish prejudices of man.

To-day what may woman not do? In 1880, of the 250 ordinary occupations pursued by the workers of the world, there were only 29 in which one or more women might not be found. In every line where skill, perseverance, patience, taste and judgment are required, she equals if she does not surpass the man. Where to-day is woman's proper sphere? From the pulpit, from the rostrum, from the bench, and from the bar, hear her answer, "It is here." She speaks from the canvas of the painter, in the marble of the sculptor, in the creations of the designer, through the press, with mighty voice; in the schools, and in the stores, in the office, in the hospital, everywhere her influence is a potent factor that is felt, and is daily growing stronger. Even the colleges that so long have barred their doors against her, are now inviting her to enter their sacred halls, opening the door a little way, as it were, with the hand, but keeping the foot pressed jealously against it that she may not open it too wide. Soon they must open wide, however, to give her free access and on terms of full equality with man, she will not be kept out much longer.

For all these things that woman has done and is now doing is she any the less womanly or is she not rather, the more truly the companion, the comfort, the purifier, the strengthener of man, to-day than ever before?

The right of equal suffrage is still denied her, but this will not be for long. To-day in twenty-five States and Territories some form of suffrage is allowed to woman; and it will not be long before man, he who has heretofore held the reins of government in his strong hands, will find that he needs the woman's assistance in straightening out and putting to rights the fearful muddle politically into which he has brought matters. He will be glad of her clear insight and judgment to assist him and he will never hesitate to call for her aid on account of his meanness in keeping her out of her rights so long.

The 19th century is fast closing; its sun will soon sink over the western hills while all the world is lighted by the radiance of its glory tinted clouds. Even now as it slowly sinks beneath the horizon we can discern the first faint streaks of the coming dawn of another century that shall surpass the one now dying away; surpass it in the growth of goodness, charity, peace, in the cultivation and the increase of all the virtues; for the 20th century is to mark a new era in the world, the era of woman's emancipation from all the old-time narrowing creeds and doctrines, thus broadening and civilizing, enlightening and humanizing all mankind. All hail to woman's century.

"Poverty Party." THE Y. W. C. A. gave a Poverty Party last Friday evening at the Association Room to the Y. M. C. A. and their friends. Fines were imposed for "biled" shirts, silk ties, shoes shined, collars, etc. Everybody came in their "worst," and the costumes were wonderful and various. A "competent com-mitty" was at the door to inspect all arrivals and introduce "bashful fellers." Everyone caught "flirtin" or "makin luv" was severely fined by the vigilant committee.

High carnival reigned until the time for the program, which consisted of old-fashioned songs, character performances, and a side-splitting pantomime of a bashful couple and the irate pater. Among the notables present were Mrs. O'Houlihan, Weary Willie, Mrs. Smith of Smithville, The Old Maid, Hon. Josiah Hayseed of Jayville, Comrades, The Doctor, Ma's Girl, The Idiot, Grandma, and various other poverty-stricken celebrities.

The best sustained characters were Mr. Irwin Ayres as "A Tramp," and "Miss Dicea Jameson as the "Old Maid."

The debate, "Who deserves the most praise, Kristopher Kerlumbus for discovering of America, or Mr. Washington for defending onto it?" was carried out with much "spirit," and it was decided that is Kris had not "diskivered" this part of the world, George wouldn't have had any chance to show himself, and thereupon the palm was awarded to Kerlumbus.

Wednesday evening, April 12, was the occasion of a very enjoyable reception at Lincoln

Hall, given by Lincoln Hall and Cottage students to the victorious 'Varsity Basket-Ball Team. The first floor was very tastefully decorated with evergreens, mottoes, bunting, etc., college colors being much in evidence. The Band, Orchestra and Symphony Club discoursed sweet music, Miss Monroe and Mr. Loder sang, Miss De Laguna read an appropriate selection and Misses Ward and Strosnider spoke on behalf of the team. Dr. Stubbs closed the program with a few appropriate remarks. The familiar sound of the college and other yells were heard more than once during the evening, and all in all, it was a most enthusiastic and enjoyable gathering.

An open meeting of the Crescent Club will take place in the Gym. on the evening of April 28. Following is the program:

Address.....	Mr. Grant
Instrumental duet.....	Misses Ede and Shier
Essay.....	Miss M. Henry
Recitation.....	Miss A. Smith
Mandolin solo.....	Miss A. Henry
Essay.....	Mr. Maxson
Music.....	Orchestra
Questions of the Day.....	Mr. McElroy
Vocal solo.....	Miss H. Ede
Reading.....	Miss Strosnider
Piano solo.....	Mr. Thompson
Recitation.....	Miss Murette

All students cordially invited to attend.

On account of the inter-class field day date being set for Saturday, April 15, the regular social was postponed until the same evening.

The Philomathean Society will produce their drama, "Among the Breakers," in the Gym. Saturday evening, April 22d. It will be open to all and the price of admission has been placed at ten cents.

Mr. C. C. Michener, College Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for the West, will visit the University next Thursday, April 20th. He will address the student body at Assembly and the Association at 7 o'clock Thursday evening.

The campaign for funds for sending delegates to the Student Conference has been successfully carried on by the Y. M. C. A. for some time and enough money has been pledged to admit of a strong delegation being sent to Pacific Grove.

Students are asked to pay up their subscriptions promptly.

The University Dramatic Club will put on a four-act drama entitled "The Rough Riders" some time early in May. The play has been cast as follows:

James Crawford, a Cuban planter.....	N. H. Bruette
Robt. Hamilton, his Secretary	G. R. Richard
Ramon Morano, his Overseer, and a wolf in sheep's clothing.....	E. D. Boyle
Don Louis Morano, son of Ramon, afterwards a Spanish Cavalry Captain.....	H. H. Dexter
Dennis Rafferty, a Corporal in the Rough Riders....	W. J. Luke
.....	Jas. S. Giles
Sam Jackson, an American of color.....	T. W. Mack
Pedro, a Cuban spy.....	Maude Nash
Alma Crawford, the planter's daughter	Delle Boyd
Inez, her maid

Joshes.

"ALL present excepting Lord Riff Raff Ruffles," remarked the President of the Expedition Club as he tilted back his chair and placed his feet on the table. "The Secretary will dispense with the roll call and reading of minutes," he concluded, drawing an antique corn cob from his pocket and complacently stuffing it with fragrant "Duke's Mixture, preparatory to following the example of the other members, who were already hardly discernable through the curling wreaths of smoke.

"Yes," spoke up Cindertrack Jones, M. D., "Ruffles is seriously ill. His hearing is totally gone and his mind is in an unbalanced condition. You know he wore that golf suit on the last expedition, and notwithstanding our urgent advice, neglected to put cotton in his ears. The suit was loud even upon the cool and shady paths about the campus, but its resonance was increased ten fold by the glaring sun of the open country. I am very sorry for Ruffles, but he walked into the danger with his eyes open.

Why, I was obliged to remove the suit from his room before he could go to sleep."

Here Father Saxton untangled himself from the three chairs he was occupying, extracted the pipe from between his teeth and spat mournfully toward a cuspidor some ten feet distant. When in a posture permissible of speech, he remarked in his usual deliberate manner:

"It seems that many worthy members are drifting away from us. Nearly every journey takes from our midst some beloved brother. There was Keddy, we lost him at San Jose last fall. Would stay at the conservatory. He is quite proficient now, I hear." Here the Father paused, sadly stroking his long, flowing hair. "And old Baron de Boyle," he continued, swallowing a lump in his throat, "we left him in Virginia City a few weeks later. He went into the florist's business, I believe."

"Also R. Richard Nash, Gray Jegerie and I. Mallrite Stubbs," excitedly exclaimed the Rev. James Prior Jiles, his face twitching with emotion like an equine's epidermis in fly time.

"They are all gone. We lost Grag down at Stanford; never saw him after he went into that gymnasium in search of ice cream. I always predicted love of ice cream would be the undoing of him."

"Let us adjourn, let us adjourn, brothers," sobbed the aged President, bending forward that his copious tears might not spoil the brilliant polish of his shoes. "We cannot successfully conduct business while in this frame of mind. Let us accept for the present a standing invitation to become charity members of the T. & J." An then the sorrowful remnant of the Expedition Club filed out of the hall and off toward the brilliantly lighted habitat of the famous T. & J.

❧ Campus. ❧

The Band has received a lot of new music.

J. C. Harris visited the University on the 12th on his way to Carson.

Mrs. Oliver Perry of Smith Valley visited the University on the 13th.

Clyde Grant and Joe Marzen spent the vacation at their homes in Truckee.

S. Mitchell and O. Willis spent the recent recess at their homes in Sacramento.

Andrew Hansen '96 was on the Campus on the 13th on his way to South Africa.

Miss Ada Pitt and Miss Bessie Purviance spent the recess at their homes in Lovelock.

Miss Kate Sunderland '98 spent the fore part of the month visiting friends in San Francisco.

W. H. Bruette '99 and M. E. Pratt '00 took a trip to Carson and Virginia during the late recess.

Pres. Stubbs went to Lovelock on the 14th on business connected with the Experiment Station.

Hardach '9-, who has been in the employ of a mining company of South Africa for several years past, has been promoted, and Bristol '94 has his place.

Dr. Phillips went to San Francisco on the 8th.

D. M. Gloster of Sierra Valley was on the Campus on March 30th.

R. S. Stubbs '01 and D. P. Stubbs '01 spent the recess in San Francisco.

Tom Acree of Austin visited the University on the 1st on his way to Carson.

Prof. Averill of the Virginia High School visited the University on March 28th.

H. H. Howe '01 left the University on the 31st. He will enter again in the Fall.

The Signal Corps has been disbanded and the members are now drilling in the companies.

J. N. Evans '97, who spent about four months in the East, put in an appearance on March 27th.

On the 10th the girls who remained in the Cottage during the recess went on a picnic at the Poor farm.

Valentine Staunton and Evan Williams Jr. spent the first week of the month visiting friends at Lincoln Hall.

Pres. Stubbs delivered the lecture before Assembly on the 13th. The subject was "Leland Stanford Jr. University."

J. M. Gregory '98 went to San Francisco on March 23d, where he spent about two weeks enjoying gay city life.

Miss Martha Hinch, Miss Tessie Fitzgerald and Miss Alice Comerford spent the vacation at their homes in Virginia.

Frank and Annie and John and Mattie missed dinner on a Sunday afternoon. Evidently Cupid has no mercy on them.

Joe Durkee '95, who has been in South Africa for the past two years, started for this country on the 5th on account of ill health.

P. Y. Gilson, Com. '97, Jim and Tom Easton and Mrs. G. R. Richard and son Robert of Carson, and Mrs. T. J. Tally and Mrs. Col. Boyle and son Alex of Virginia visited the 'Varsity on the 2d.

T. J. Lawrence '99, D. W. Hayes '00, Miss Ida Holmes '00, Miss Hickerson, Misses Margaret and Agatha Henry, Miss Elizabeth Evans, Miss Amber Smith, Miss Bessie McCormack, Miss Luella Meginnis, Prof. Lewers and Dr. Stubbs accompanied the basket-ball team on their trip below.

Prof. Cowgill departed for Arizona on the 7th. The Professor goes with the hope that a change of climate will improve his health.

Miss Edna Robinson, Nor. '98, and Miss Minnie Lounsbury, Nor. 98, who have been teaching in Nye county, were on the Campus on the 14th.

Saxton '00, Jones '00, Brule '00, Miss Mattie McIntyre, Nor '99; Miss Marye Williams, Miss May Kelley, Miss Flora Hall, and the Buzzers, spent the recess in Carson.

At General Assembly on the 6th the Senior Class in Pedagogy held forth. The exercises were devoted to Kipling and his works. Following was the program:

College World.

The University of Pennsylvania recently received, by the will of Mrs. Josephine Lippincott, $5,000 for the benefit of the Veterinary Department of the University.

Dr. Parker has just completed his fortieth year as an instructor in Lombard University. In the Lombard Review is given a sketch of his long and useful life. Expressions of those who were students under him tell the value of his work as a teacher. One student says: "Mr. Parker not only taught his pupils in the ordinary sense of the word, but he taught them to desire knowledge. More than all to me, as a boy, was the personality of the man."

Five members of the Faculty of the Ohio Medical University recently resigned their positions. This is the outcome of some alleged difficulties which had arisen with reference to the last examination given the students and in which, as it was declared by several of the professors who have resigned, good work was not done by those examined. Because of the failure of a majority of the students to pass, an investigation was made by the State Board.

General Wheeler, U. S. A., proposed some time ago that each American college receive two Cubans and educate them free of charge. Brown University has made an offer to do so.

Owing to a large number of foreign students at the University of Berlin, the institution has established a choir in elementary German, in order to perfect pronunciation and an intelligent appreciation of the university lectures.

The students of the three upper classes of Lehigh University having voted to request the re-establishment of compulsory attendance at chapel on week days, the Faculty of the University has accordingly made such a rule. The action was taken by the three classes because of their confidence that college spirit would be strengthened by the change.

Yale is engaged in establishing a fully equipped department in Scandinavian. Ancient and modern Scandinavian has been taught at the University since 1840, and old Norse since 1891. The purpose is now to have an auxiliary department of Germanic languages, which shall offer instruction in modern Swedish and Norwegian language and literature, and also advanced courses in Old Norse and Germanic Antiquities and Mythology. Yale is happy in having secured the library of Count Ricat, a fine collection of sources and works in the domain of Old Norse and Scandinavian history and antiquities.

Dr. D. K. Pearsons has fostered, in some of the cases practically built, some sixteen colleges. He does not believe that there are too many colleges, neither that there are too many young men and women attending college.

Lombard University has adopted a new plan for the purpose of increasing the interest in the chapel exercises. Fifteen minutes each day is devoted to short talks by members of the Faculty, except one day which is given to the students for the purpose of bringing up matters of general student interest.

Wesleyan University seems to stand almost alone in its active condemnation of co-education as detrimental to the best interests of a college. The opening of the University of North Carolina to women, and the movement in favor of co-education now on foot at Rutgers, are evidences of a tide of feeling opposed to that expressed recently at Wesleyan.

On June 15 the University of Illinois will open a summer school of field and laboratory biology. The school will be held under the supervision of the dean of the College of Science, and will be open to university students, to teachers and to investigating specialists. Four regular courses will be offered, two each in botany and zoology, each course leading to a credit on the university records, while facilities and instruction will be afforded advanced students desiring to pursue the work along special lines.

Berkeley
vs. N. S. U.

IT was a jolly crowd, that gay and merry throng of lassies that departed from our depot on the morning of Friday, April 7th, flushed with the anticipation of a trip through a neighbor State and a visit to the metropolis of the West. This was one cause of the gaiety and pleasure of that event, but there was another and a deeper reason; one which caused the hearts of our co-eds to thump with a feeling of uncertainty. "Oh! if we could only win," said one. "Win or die, or give 'em the mumps," said another. "Well, they'll know they have been to a ball game when we're through with them," were the words of a third.

Thus it was that along with the feeling of jollification there was a feeling of desire for victory when our team should meet Berkeley.

We are sorry to say that we were unable to have a staff representative at the game, but we know this, that our California friends received their money's worth and a little more. Nevada is proud of the fact that she sent out a team of ladies to play basket-ball on fair terms; nor did we expect them to return, bearing all the appearance of having been through a sausage mill. The Berkeley team have adopted a code of rules of their own, and should be left to practice these rules by themselves until they learn to play fair ball. Perhaps we might present to our friends across the mountains a copy of the rules of basket-ball. Or perhaps we might bring them up here and let them observe; they would learn that basket-ball was not pugilism. Should we send a team to Berkeley again, let us provide them with baseball masks and padded suits.

The game as a whole consisted of a great profusion of fouls on the part of Berkeley desiring to win regardless of the means. In every position Nevada was well represented. The opponents found their match in the centre against Kerby, Montrose and Holmes; while as guards, Ward, Peckham and Sparks, and as forwards, Linscott, Worland and Strosnider maintained their positions in a manner which would do credit to anyone.

California has some individual good players, but possesses no team-work.

The game at the close of the first half stood 3 to 3, but in the second half two field goals were scored by Berkeley and the game ended with a score of 7 to 3 in favor of California.

Nevada vs. Stanford.

FROM all accounts the game between Stanford and our co-eds was a clean and well-contested one. Our team-work showed up well, and their team-work has been highly commented on by the newspapers. The close score shows both teams to be well matched and indicated that they played good ball. The score stood 3 to 2, with Nevada on the big end; two of these points go to the credit of Miss Linscott, she having thrown a field goal; the other point is to the credit of Miss Strosnider, she having scored a goal on a foul.

This game brought out the excellence of playing of four of our young ladies, namely: Misses Kerby, Ward, Strosnider and Linscott, and the RECORD takes the liberty to pronounce them among the star players of the Coast.

This is the first time in which Nevada has defeated a college team, and we feel duly proud of our victorious girls. Let us follow up this victory with others, and the time is not far off when Nevada will be recognized in athletics among the colleges of the West.

From all accounts, the hospitality shown to our young ladies at Stanford deserves the very highest mention. Courtesy and good fellowship greeted them on every hand, so that our co-eds delight in saying, "Long live Stanford."

Track.

IN the inter-class field day on Saturday last there was a great lack of spirit among the classes. The time was exceedingly slow in all the races, while the distances in the jumps and vaults were not up to the average.

The 100-yard dash was won by Moorman; McCloud second.

In the 220, Moorman and Keyser finished in order.

In the 440, Moran, Emery and Able showed up well.

In the 880, Scott and Harry Jamison made a good finish.

Jamison won the mile run in an easy manner and good time.

In the shot-put, C. Smith and Moorman made an excellent showing, and we anticipate good results in the future.

Keddie won the mile bicycle, with Condon second.

The two-mile bicycle was finished in the same order.

On account of the high wind it was impossible to make much showing in the hurdles. However, Stubbs and Kornmayer did well under the circumstances.

From all indications we should work hard and diligently from now on until the field day and many of last Saturday's records must be changed. We have prospect of a strong team and can win if we will work.

The contestants have been formed into squads and will train under their respective leaders. The showers should be made use of and our men should be properly cared for by the college trainer. There is a sign of gross negligence when men complain of being sore and muscle bound, and such conditions should not exist.

In the inter-class field day, the trophy banner was won by the Sophomore class, they having scored 63 points against 23, the next highest. This is the second banner carried off by the class of '01 in the present season.

A challenge has been issued from Virginia to the 'Varsity baseball team for a game, but as our men are all at track practice, we don't know what will be done.

INCONSISTENCY.

[From an inspiration received on observing Miss G.'s Easter bonnet.]

In the class-room I sat
Behind a big hat,
On a co-ed who sat just in front,
The Prof. could not see,
So ne'er thought of me.
Bless the hat! It saved me a "flunk."

At the opera I sat,
Behind the same hat
On the same girl, who sat just in front.
The stage it obscured,
My hate it incurred.
Blast the hat! 'Tis decidedly "punk."

Exchange.

"No wonder that me darlin' is cross-eyed
Said love-sick young Pat to his mother,
"For both of her eyes is so pretty,
That each wants to look at the other."

He took her out for an ice cream treat,
His pretty, blue-eyed Sal,
But fainted when he read the sign,
"Cream, ninety cents a gal."

"He loved his Dinah dearly,
And he sighed to her one night:
'Dinah, could you love me?'
Ane she whispered, 'Dinah might.'

"They were married in the autumn.
When she blows him up at night,
He realizes what it meant
When she whispered 'dynamite.' "

Charles Bigelow's "Table d'Hote" song in the "French Maid" is exceedingly good wit, but notoriously bad verse. Here is a selection that will drive away the blues:

The Tabasco said, "I'm little, but I'm hot stuff,
just the same,"

And the lemon gave him quite a sour look.

The duck got his cavas back up, when they said he wasn't game,

And the nervous jelly trembled till it shook.

The ice cream acted coldly, when the pie, a crusty chap,

Said he thought the vinegar's manner rather tart.

But when the radish horsey said the Worcestershire was saucy

The butter's golden hair threw up its part.

The apple sauced the coffee when the latter whispered round

That he didn't think the beets could beat the band.

The chocolate hit him on the cocoa, but the coffee stood his ground,

And the sugar showed that he had lots of sand.

The Italian macaroni was kicked by a cordial pony,

And the small clam got it in the neck.

A waiter who was handy, hurried off to bring some brandy,

But when it came, the dinner was a wreck.

The shrimp said that the crawfish was a lobster, nothing else.

The crawfish said, "You might be, if you'd grow."

The rich old oyster fritter wouldn't recognize the smelts

That knew him when he hadn't so much dough.

The mutton muttered "Gammon," when the cod fish told the salmon

He could beat him playing fishball any day.

When the steak, a tough old rounder, said
there's no soul to the flounder,

The oily salad murmured, "Lettuce pray."

The mince pie got quite spicy, and the hash felt all cut up;

The honeycomb said, put him in a cell."

Said the apple to the apricot, "I bet you are a peach."

And the Londonderry water said, "Well, well."

The water cress caressed the oil; the salt was feeling fine.

The claret blushed a deep and rosy red,

When the calf's head, rather lippy, called the red bird "Little chippie."

Then we found that the limberger cheese was dead.
