TIME AND CHANGE

The cadets-or pardon us, pre-cadets-move in this evening, and the Army Enlisted Reserve, or most of it, moves out March 15. It's apparent things aren't going to be quite as they were on the Hill.

There will be a lot of strange faces around, and some longfamiliar ones are going to be missing.

The entire student body, and the faculty as well, seems to have accepted the fact that we are going to have 250 cadets going to school here with entire equanimity, a little surprising in consideration of the change that this is likely to make in the state of things as they usually are.

Of course, the fact that it is not yet a physical reality that air trainees are to be marching to classes on the campus come next week may have something to do with the attitude.

People may not realize what the new situation will mean until

Things are certain to be quite a little bit different next week, because of the pre-cadets, and we might as well start adjusting ourselves to the fact. The picture of what we can expect may be drawn from the available facts on preparations for the trainees, all of which have appeared in the news columns, and which we don't propose to re-hash here.

As for the enlisted reserve, most of the men won't mind going so much, no doubt preferring the definite action involved to the suspense they've been kept in since the inception of the ERC.

A load was lifted from the minds of most of those who received notice this week that they will leave March 15.

The men will be eligible to receive half credit in their courses if they stay in school until March 5, and seniors may receive full credit for continuing through March 12, both provisions being contingent, of course, upon the status of the student in his courses when

Just to be somewhat consistent with other previous actions and Six Women Appear announcements on the reserve, the army left some reservists on the Before Upperclass fence, wondering what gives. (This writer speaks feelingly. He's one

The number of fence-hangers probably comes to something like fifteen men, depending upon exactly how many of the original 98 men in the reserve are considered eligible for active service before

It sems logical that the army would hardly call 34 men and leave only 15 or so behind, and we believe that the men-on-the-fence will get orders very shortly to report with the rest of the group. So the fact of the departure of the ERC is going to make a

The whole confusing, hard to realize situation comes to something like this, in human terms :

The guy that grinned at you over his morning coffee in the Wolf Den won't be there any more, very likely, and instead there will be uniforms all around, if the pre-cadets get any free time at all, since the Wolf Den is considered on the campus for the trainees.

And you might miss the guy who was there before, but don't worry about him. He'll get along.

And the pre-cadets will probably turn out to be nice people, too. So be it.
