

Ex-president speaks to reporters

DON LaPLANTE

The efforts of the dean of agriculture may have contributed to the firing of Max Milam as president of UNR, Milam told a press conference at his Reno home Monday morning.

Milam went as far as to say that Regent Molly Knudtsen of Austin, who was the swing vote that fired him, might just have well been Dean Dale Bohmont of the College of Agriculture when it came to the vote.

"Regent Knudtsen is extremely protective of Dean Dale Bohmont and the College of Agriculture and has gone to great lengths to protect the College of Agriculture," he said.

Milam said he and Bohmont had engaged in a running battle over many issues since he became UNR president.

He also said Bohmont is a very good dean, but often fails to work for the good of the university.

"He has gone to great lengths to protect the autonomy of the College of Agriculture, even taking action which jeopardized the entire university on several occasions," he said.

Bohmont said later the thought Milam's statement about his controlling Knudtsen was absurd.

"In no way does anyone control Mrs. Knudtsen. It is inappropriate and incorrect to even think that I could control the way she votes," Bohmont said.

"We see the College of Agriculture as part of a team. I consider myself a team player. We are not treated any differently when it comes to the budget as the English Department, for example," he said.

Milam also claimed Bohmont had certified some erroneous figures to the U.S. Department of Agriculture that would have caused the federal government to take an "audit exception."

This would have required the university to pay money back to the federal government and caused the university embarrassment.

He said he had discovered the errors on Thursday and had ordered them corrected, but had taken no further action because "you know what happened Friday."

Milam also said the amount of the error, $100,000, was about the amount that had been taken from the college of agriculture to set up the central business office that was mandated by the 1977 legislature.

He said Bohmont had opposed the establishment of the business center and taking the money from the college because it interfered with his autonomy.

Bohmont denied the charges and said he was not quite sure what Milam was talking about.

Milam also said he knew for about three weeks he would likely be fired by the board on Friday. He said he had been informed Knudtsen would probably change her vote.

He said he made no statement at the Friday meeting because he had already made his defense at the meeting of the board in January and he already knew what was coming.

Milam also said he was shocked at the way board chairman James L. Buchanan originally tried to call for a vote on firing Milam without any discussion.

"I was surprised that there seemed to be the intent to do it with no discussion at all until Regent (Fred) Anderson spoke up," he said.

Milam had other comments about Buchanan. He said he had not intended to comment at all until he read some of the regents statements in the newspaper.

Milam said Buchanan controls the votes of regents Chris Karamanos of Las Vegas and John Tom Ross of Carson City. He said Buchanan had told him a few months ago that "we up here at the University of Nevada-Reno were going to see how vindictive he could be I sure found out."

REGENTS AX MILAM

DON LaPLANTE

Max Milam was fired as president of UNR on Friday by a 5-1 vote of the university system Board of Regents.

Milam, who had headed the UNR campus for more than three and a half years, was dismissed at the beginning of the meeting despite a strong show of support from faculty, staff and the student body president.

Even though three members of the board were missing from the meeting, two due to the snowstorm Friday morning that closed the Reno airport, the board was able to get the necessary majority vote for dismissal.

Voting to fire Milam were James L. Buchanan, John Buchanan and Chris Karamanos, all of Las Vegas, Molly Knudtsen of Austin and John Tom Ross of Carson City. The only "no" vote came from Fred Anderson of Reno.

Lilly Fong of Las Vegas and Brenda Mason of North Las Vegas both missed the meeting because of the storm and Louis Lombardi of Reno was out of town, reportedly on vacation. All three were on record supporting Milam.

The meeting started with Knudtsen, who voted in January to retain Milam, asking that an item be added to the agenda to reconsider the previous action that retained Milam on a 4-4 vote. Milam had been under fire then for trying to hire former Chancellor Neil Humphrey as a $3,000 a month consultant.

"... I have become aware from several sources that the campus atmosphere at UNR is one of unrest, tension and disorientation to the point of adversely affecting the operation of the university and its ability to meet its responsibilities to its students and faculty," she said in a prepared statement.

She also said this matter could not wait until the next meeting and then she requested that the board "consider the possibility of relieving UNR President Max Milam of his administrative duties as president..."

The board then voted 5-0 with Anderson abstaining to reconsider the matter. Board chairman James L. Buchanan was going to call for a vote without discussion, but Anderson said he had a statement to make and also wanted to hear from the audience. Buchanan then asked the members of the audience for their comments.

Then followed a long parade of deans, vice presidents, faculty, alumni and the student body president who took the podium to defend Milam and urge his retention.

The strongest statement to the board came from Robert Gorrell, academic vice president, who after Milam was fired was designated acting chief officer until an acting president is named in a few weeks.

Gorrell said that based on his 32 years at UNR he wanted to lecture the board on their methods.

"I must confess I am appalled at this procedure in which one dismisses a person for no cause citing only heresy and no statement of the charge against him, and consulting no one on the faculty," Gorrell said.

"This is about as irresponsible an action as I have ever seen at the university. It is very improper, it is a self-defeating procedure that is going on."

While there were many comments during the meeting by the audience, none of the board members who voted to fire Milam gave any of their reasons during the meeting.

After the vote, Knudtsen told reporters that her vote was not based on gossip, rumors or anonymous phone calls, but she had been dissatisfied with Milam's performance for a long time. She said she was particularly upset with what had been happening to the university's professional schools.

"The Mackay School of Mines has fallen into a disastrous financial situation and the College of Engineering has had trouble. The College of Agriculture has a very strong program and it has been having considerable difficulty," she said.

Knudtsen also said she was dissatisfied with a number of the personnel actions Milam has taken. She was specifically upset about the forced resignation of home economics Dean Patricia Tripple last year.

During the meeting, several university officials told the board of their support for Milam.

ASUN President John McCaskill told the regents he fully supported Milam and he also urged the board not to consider such an important matter with three regents absent.

Joan Chambers, chairman of the Faculty Senate, told the board the senate opposed any action that ignores, violates or circumvents existing procedures.

She reminded the board of the evaluation procedure that was taking place as provided for in the UNR by-laws. Under

An act of cowardice

If you've never watched someone fired in public I highly recommend the experience to you. It's one you won't soon forget, and it's very educational, especially the way it's done by the University of Nevada System Board of Regents.

When the regents fire someone they don't bother to tell anyone why they do it; they just vote. They don't tell the person who they fire, nor do they tell the people they work for—the citizens of Nevada.

By the way the regents handled it, the firing of UNR President Max Milam last week was an act of pure cowardice. Not one person—not one regent and not one member of the university community—had the guts to stand up at Friday's meeting and publicly state his opposition to Milam, even though by that time it was obvious that Milam was gone. Once Regent Molly Knudtsen requested reconsideration of last month's failed move to fire him, everyone knew that this time it would succeed.

After the meeting several regents talked about general unrest and dissatisfaction on the UNR campus. Yet no one could produce any evidence to support the allegations. No one could produce any unrested or dissatisfied member of the community, or even a letter from one, to demonstrate a problem.

In fact, the only regent to say anything on the subject of Milam's removal during the meeting was Dr. Fred Anderson of Reno. Anderson had the courage to ask to hear the reasons from Milam's firing, but board Chairman James Buchanan of Las Vegas said he didn't want to get into a debate. Buchanan was in the process of firing the chief administrator of a major university, but he didn't want to get into a debate!

The Board of Regents is made up of elected officials. They owe their positions to the people of this state, and they have a responsibility to those same people. The people have a right to expect to be told why an important public official has been fired. Generalizations of unrest or veiled implications of wrongdoing presented in private talks outside of a meeting do not take the place of the truth.

The unfortunate truth, however, is that the people will not be told. They will not be told because the regents don't have any good reasons to tell. The reasons for the firing are for the most part personal, and totally political.

Most importantly, the reasons deal with power—the power held by Max Milam, by deans of certain colleges and by the Board of Regents. The regents have now just about concluded the process of consolidating all power of any significance in their own office. In the process they have destroyed UNR's administrative power center while leaving individual administrators to sneak around vying for the ears of regents.

Just one year ago there were three strong divisions with the University of Nevada System—UNR, UNLV and the Community College Division. In June the regents fired Charles Donnelly, president of the community colleges. The division was then broken up into three separate colleges with three separate presidents. No longer was their a strong voice to speak for the division.

In August UNS Chancellor Neil Humphrey resigned, and we are still waiting for his replacement to be named. It now appears likely that UNLV President Donald Baepler will soon be that replacement, leaving UNLV without a president.

Now Max Milam, UNR president, is gone, and the regents say they don't expect to name a permanent replacement for anywhere from one year to 15 months. A permanent replacement for Baepler will take even longer.

Where does all this leave the university system? Basically, in the back pocket of the regents. While the universities are without strong leadership the system administration will be preparing the budget for fiscal 1979-80 and 1980-81. There will be no strong voice of support for UNR protecting the university's interests. UNLV will also be without a voice, but they will at least have a man in the chancellor's office who had spent many years on the UNLV campus. UNR will not be so lucky.

Who then will benefit from what Acting President Robert Gorell termed "the most appalling action I've seen in 32 years"? The beneficiaries will be the members of the regents' office who will no longer have to worry about having the presidents on their back while they are preparing the university system's budget, and those administrators on the UNR campus who already have the regents' ears. Interestingly enough, those must of necessity be the same administrators who had the regents' ears last week when Max Milam was fired.

You can be sure UNR won't benefit. In fact, it's likely that the university will suffer greatly. The budget will undoubtedly be a shambles by the time it gets through the next legislature. You can also be sure that the Milam affair will get plenty of coverage in those journals most often read by campus administrators around the country, and you can bet the good administrators are going to be reluctant to step into the presidency of any university in Nevada. It'll take a hell of a selling job to get anyone of quality here, and whoever gets the job is going to find himself with two years of budget designed to strangle UNR into submission.

Well, that should teach us all a lesson. One professor told me after the firing that when I enter a regents' meeting I should leave my ideals at the door. He's right, of course, but what good is a university if you have to forget about your ideals? Those of us who really believed that a quality university was possible in Nevada have been shown conclusively that the politicians will have none of it. The regents are going to have their own way, even if they have to fire everyone, including the students.

But the regents will eventually be sorry for this act. The next time they start feeling the heat, the next time an agency threatens a college's accreditation or the next time a dean complains of unfair treatment the regents will have no one to blame. They'll be on their own, and maybe Max Milam will have the last laugh.

Faculty salaries to get boost

DON LaPLANTE

The Board of Regents at its meeting on Friday in Reno voted to increase faculty salaries 6.6 percent across the board for the coming academic year.

The board approved the recommendation of the university officers that will increase each step in the current salary schedule by 6.6 percent. Any salary funds available above the 6.6 percent will be used to provide increases for promotions, merit and inequities.

At UNR, it is expected that there will be about 160 salary steps available for merit and promotion purposes. The salary proposal adopted is generally in line with those advocated by the faculty senates throughout the system and the System Ad Hoc committee on professional compensation.

The board also approved the 1978-79 work program for the university system. The budget provides for about $62.5 million for the system.

The work program for UNR provides about 13 new professional faculty positions scattered throughout the system and four new classified employees.

The board also redefined what a full-time equivalent student will be. Previously the university figured 16 credits for undergraduates and 9 credits for graduates were the equivalent of a full-time student.

However, the board was told by Acting Chancellor Donald Baepler these provided a built-in 7.5 percent differential when comparing to other states.

"We are truly comparing apples with oranges when we compare our figures with those of other states," he said.

The board approved lowering the figures to 15 credits for an undergraduate and 8 credits for a graduate. Baepler said figures are used by the states surrounding Nevada.

He said the new formula could mean an extra $2-million if the system is adopted for budget use, since the amount the school gets from the state is based on the number of full-time equivalent students.

Baepler said if the system had been used for the current biennium it would have provided another 56 faculty members based upon the current budget formulas.

However, it is possible that the state budget office will not adopt the figures for the budget and will not provide any increase in revenue for the university.

Baepler said even if this does happen he wants to use the new figures. He said at least that way when comparing with other states the figures will be correct.

He said one reason for the change was the new patterns of student attendance. He said students do not now take 16 credits each semester for eight semesters, which is what the previous definition was based on. He said students now often go to school part-time and take longer to get the degree.

The regents also approved a number of proposals for new programs for inclusion in the 1979-81 budget.

A proposal for a master's degree in land-use planning and policy for UNR was given approval in concept. The persons involved will now have to prepare detailed specifications before receiving final approval.

Final approval from the regents was given to an associate degree in nursing to be offered by Northern Nevada Community College in Elko.

A contingent of seven came from Elko to give their support to the proposal. Before the program will begin, funding will be required from the 1979 legislature.

The board also approved the physical master plans for UNR and UNLV as developed by John Carl Warnecke and Associates.

For UNR the plan foresees a maximum student enrollment of between 12,000 and 13,000 full-time equivalent, or perhaps more than 16,000 total, students on campus.

The plan called for the acquisition of the land south of the university to Interstate 80, west to Evans Avenue and north to McCarren Boulevard. The traditional quad would be the focus of the academic core with a series of walkways connecting the academic areas. The plan calls for the development of the engineering quad and more work on the open space between Mack Social Science and the Physics/Chemistry buildings.

Parking would be expanded in the north part of the campus, utilizing a shuttle bus service. Another possibility will be parking structures on the south and the east.

A proposed special events and basketball pavillion would be located on land north of the present parking lot. There would also be an auditorium at the far north end of the campus.

Postponed until the next meeting were discussions of the report by the UNLV Senate on the NCAA investigation of the school and a report by Scott Lorenz, student body president at UNLV, on the proposed building of a rebel statue on campus. Both were delayed because a number of the participants were snowed out of Reno.

The next regular meeting of the board will be March 17 in Las Vegas.

the procedure, a committee of faculty, students and deans were evaluating Milam's performance with a report to be presented to the board in May for consideration when Milam's contract would have been up for renewal in June.

Chambers criticized the procedure being used by the board in firing Milam.

"Decisions made in any but the fair and judicious manner agreed to are a threat to the faculty and the university and are not in the best interest of higher education in Nevada. Furthermore, they will tend to erode the credibility of the regents with both the faculty and the public," Chambers said.

Rebecca Stafford, dean of arts and sciences, told the board that she had opposed hiring Humphrey as a consultant believing there were better uses for the money, but she completely supports the job Milam has been doing as president.

Don Health, former Alumni Association president, who spoke on Milam's behalf at last month's meeting in Las Vegas, told the board of a unanimous resolution of support for Milam from the 21-member alumni council.

Arthur Baker, dean of the Mackay School of Mines, told the board he found a tremendous amount of support from Milam.

"Max is the best president I certainly have ever seen," Baker said.

After other testimonials to Milam, chairman Buchanan turned to Anderson for his statement. Anderson said all the board had heard were Milam's supporters and asked Buchanan to ask for those who opposed Milam to speak.

Buchanan then asked, "Is there anybody wishing to speak to the other side of the coin?"

There was no one in the packed room that came to the podium to speak against Milam.

Anderson then challenged Buchanan to produce the letters he had referred to at the January meeting that was against Milam. Buchanan said he didn't wish to get into a debate.

However, Anderson fired back that, "I think when a person is about to be axed he deserves to hear the reasons against him."

But there were no reasons given and the board proceeded to vote to fire Milam for "general dissatisfaction with the administration."

Milam put away his papers and left the room after the vote. He said nothing in his own defense at the meeting. He spoke at the meeting in January and strongly defended his record as president. However, this time he may have realized that the votes were set and his job was gone.

Milam shook hands with a number of his supporters and gave a "no comment" to the press as he walked across the street from the Center for Religion and Life back to the campus.

Knudtsen said during the lunch break that he tended to overlook the professional schools and concentrated on the College of Arts and Sciences. She also said he was a very inflexible man and did not respond well to criticism.

She said she voted to retain Milam at the Jan. 6 meeting because that attempt was based on his decision to hire Humphrey as a consultant. She said he had every right to do that and that should not be grounds for dismissal.

Milam had been in serious trouble since he tried to hire Humphrey as a $3,000 a month consultant just days after Humphrey had resigned as president of the University of Alaska. Humphrey had been chancellor of the university system until he left to take the Alaska post in September.

The firing of Milam means that there may be almost a complete turnover in the system administration within the year. The regents had fired Charles Donnelly as president of the Community College Division in June and abolished the position in October. At that time they made each of the executive vice presidents on the community college division campuses into presidents.

Humphrey left in September and Donald Baepler is serving as both acting chancellor and UNLV president. A new chancellor is due to be selected in April, and if Baepler gets the job, that would mean acting presidents at both UNR and UNLV.

Ex-president

Milam said he could not explain the vote of regent John Buchanan of Las Vegas, although he might have been affected by the Humphrey incident.

He said he thought his attempt to hire former chancellor Neil Humphrey as a consultant in December was not the real cause of his firing, but "merely the occasion."

Milam also said he was not unhappy with his performance.

"I don't say I satisfied everybody, but I think I did a good job," Milam said.

He said he was pleased at the public support he has received and that his phone was ringing off the hook over the weekend.

"I will say that the things said on my behalf on Friday did me a lot of personal good than those five votes did me personal harm," Milam said.

Another of the reasons given by Knudtsen for voting to fire Milam was his handling of personnel matters at the university. Knudtsen specifically objected to the forced resignation of Patricia Tripple as dean of home economics last year.

"The fact is that Regent Knudtsen indicated approval when I mentioned it

An acting president for UNR will be named at a special regents meeting probably in about three weeks, chairman Buchanan said after the meeting. He also said that the search for a permanent president will probably take at least a year.

Before an acting president is named, the Faculty Senate and the Academic Council will be asked for recommendations.

to her privately some time before that action was taken," Milam said.

Knudtsen was unavailable for comment.

Milam also said he believed accusations he was responsible for the problems in the schools of engineering and mines were wrong.

"I think that both Deans (Charles) Breese and (Arthur) Baker will say that I have been one of the most supportive presidents of their colleges that they have ever had. And there is no reason for them to say that now out of fear of reprisal," he said.

Milam said he had no current plans and he has not yet thought about any other jobs.

He said he will rest for a few days and that he began cleaning out his office yesterday afternoon. Milam is under contract until June 30, and will receive his salary even though he has been relieved of his duties.

"I may have to decide what I want to do. My wife said it's about time for me to grow up and decide what I want to be," Milam said.

Black history

The UNR Black Student Alliance is celebrating Black History Month during February. The celebration will feature movies, skits and black history displays around the campus.

"The Black American Dream," a documentary with Stokely Carmichael and Rev. Jesse Jackson, will be shown tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Thompson Student Services Center Auditorium. The 1972 film is about a meeting of the black leaders to talk about black power today.

On Thursday there will be a presentation of black poetry, songs and skits dealing with pre-slavery, emancipation and the "period of Black Motivation," in the 1940s through the 1960s. The presentation will start at 8 p.m. in the TSSC Auditorium.

Black History Month is an attempt to recognize the contributions of blacks in history and to create an awareness of black history in both blacks and non-blacks. The BSA has set up displays in the Jot Travis Student Union and in TSSC.

After Black History Month, the BSA plans to meet with universities in Southern California to learn new methods for encouraging more participation on campus from the black students.

Within Nevada, the BSA is going to team up with the UNR staff to recruit more blacks from the state to attend the university.

Searchers rescue skier

Members of the UNR search and rescue team found a skier Saturday at 9:10 a.m. who had been reported missing since Friday.

Micheal H. Routson, of Watsonville, Calif., was found in the Winters Creek area. Routson had been reported lost by a friend at 5:12 p.m. from the Slide Mountain Ski Resort.

Unable to find the correct way down the mountain, Routson was forced to spend the night on the mountain where temperatures neared zero.

However, by 7 a.m. Saturday, members from the Washoe County Sheriff's Dept. and UNSAR, the only foot-search organization in Washoe County, had begun to search for the skier.

UNSAR had two teams present at the search: Abel team composed of Blaine Peterson, team leader; Grit Peterson; Karen Mosey; Dave Hoffman and Paul McCarty, and Baker team composed of Tony Paternostro, team leader; Terry Wilcox; Richard Sheehy; Dorcas Carper; Christopher Winslow and Bob Synder.

Grit Peterson was the first to pinpoint the location of Routson. "Just a minute," Peterson said. The team listened for a while and then they began to call Routson's name. Immediately, Routson answered their call.

"I was really expecting him to have a bad case of frostbite," Mosey admitted. "But he seemed like he was in pretty good condition."

Chinese culture

Movies from the Chinese Culture Film Series produced at the University of California at Berkeley will be shown tomorrow night at 7 in the Thompson Student Services Center Auditorium.

Shown will be "Seven Chinese Festivals," "Chinese Sculpture Through the Ages," "China Coast Fishing" and "Chinese Farm Wife."

The presentation is sponsored by the Hong Kong and Chinese International Student Association.

Effective parenting

UNR's Suzanne White and Pat Bagby will hold a free STEP program at the Center this semester. STEP—Systematic Training for Effective Parenting—will show the participants how to create an effective parent-child relationship that can grow in an atmosphere of love, understanding, cooperation and mutual respect.

The aim of the STEP program is to realize the goal most parents want: to raise responsible children, who will grow into responsible men and women, and be capable of leading happy, meaningful lives.

STEP participants will share in experiences of common concern, identify with typical responses to family problems on pre-recorded tapes, and then hear more effective, alternate approaches to the situations from the narrator. There will be weekly readings from the "Parents Handbook," and the learning and practicing of specific child-training principles and techniques.

Classes will start in the Center at 7 p.m. on Thursday nights, and last about two hours. Coffee and refreshments will follow. The course starts on Feb. 23 and will run to April 27, with a week off at Eastertime. Single parents are especially invited to attend the nine class sessions.

There is a twenty person maximum. There will be a $5 registration fee ($4 for textbook, $1 for coffee), but no tuition fees. Make reservations by calling the Center: 329-8448. Please confirm by sending your check or money order to: Pat Bagby, 670 Southworth Drive, Reno, Nev. 89512. Registrations must be made by Feb. 10, so that the textbooks may be ordered.

Put this off

If you're a procrastinator, "Procrastination" is something you won't want to put off.

Procrastination is a three-session developmental workshop beginning at 3 p.m. today at the Counseling and Testing Center at Thompson Student Services.

The workshop will be taught by Dr. Margaret Rockenbeck. It is designed to teach a person how to understand and to deal with his own form of procrastination and change it.

Other self-improvement courses offerred this month include Divorce Adjustment, starting Feb. 15; Sex Roles, Feb. 21; and mini-sessions on Personal Growth, Feb. 22.

A group studying divorce adjustment will meet in six sessions under the instruction of Dr. Jack Clarke. This group is for individuals who are at least in the separation phase of divorce. The group will focus on stages of divorce.

Sex Roles, a four-session workshop put on by Dr. Margaret Rockenbeck and Dr. Tom Kubistant, will explore the problems and dimensions of being a woman and a man in today's society.

The personal growth mini-session will focus on increasing awareness and understanding of oneself and others. This session is conducted by Dr. Tom Kubistant.

Future workshops this Spring include test anxiety reduction, values and action, and more personal growth mini-sessions.

All groups will be held at the Counseling and Testing Center in Room 209 TSSC. If you would like more information or want to sign up for a group, stop in or call 784-6810. Make sure you sign up as soon as possible—these groups will be kept relatively small.

Much alarmed

Boy oh boy have I had a fun week. Dorm life at Nye Hall has never been so exciting! This is my fourth semester at Nye and in all that time I have not socialized with everyone in the dorm as much as I have these past three evenings. I'll tell you, Nye Hall sure knows how to schedule some exciting events.

It all started Monday night at midnight. Such fun! The fire alarm went off and it turned out that it wasn't just your average false fire alarm, it was a bomb scare. After standing outside until 1 a.m., we were allowed to go back inside, with instructions to check our rooms for anything 'unusual' (Hello, is this UNPD? There are some wires going from under my bed out the window into the bushes, do you think I should lay down?).

Tuesday night at 2:30 a.m. we only had your average false fire alarm, and we only had to stand outside until 3 a.m. Not much socializing can take place in half an hour, but it's just as well since it was raining. Wednesday night the activities started at midnight and only lasted about 15 minutes. These late night gatherings have done wonders for the dorm's general morale and have made us all realize the importance of getting together with everybody. I mean, after all, isn't that an important part of going to college?

I have been able to plan what I wear to these social events since they are so late at night, all I have to do is lay out what I'm going to wear and jump into it the minute I hear the 'calling bell.' Last night I wore the pink hair rollers with the red and gray scarf. I complimented this with a blue pajama top, levis, yellow and green socks, waffle-stompers, plaid coat and a green blanket. Fetching, don't you think? I can't decide what to wear tonight, though.

Maybe I'm being too ironical about the whole thing. A minority is causing a major problem for the majority. It happens at Nye every year. It seems to be reaching a breaking point this year and Nye is earning its title as 'the zoo.' The fire department has attempted to stress the cost of these false fire alarms to the city and the fact that they do not respond as efficiently to a Nye Hall fire alarm because it's sure to be false. All of this 'calling wolf' could end in disaster one night.

What can be done? Stiffer penalties to those causing the problem, cooperation from Nye Hall students in catching these people, better security, a fire alarm system that spouts red paint on whoever pulls the alarm (there are such things). All of this costs money and where is that going to come from, though?

Dorm life can be enjoyable. Nye Hall is probably the nicest looking dorm on campus. Because of a few people, Nye dorm life is turning into a fiasco.

Does anyone else have any suggestions? Besides moving out. I am simply running out of things to wear to all of these events!

I shouldn't forget to mention, however, that I am in excellent shape from running up and down seven flights of stairs every night this week.

Tracy Austin

Valentine greeting

Dear _____ (His or her name),

I like you. Sometimes when talking to you in your room I wonder, whether or not, if I ever really communicate with you. You told me that you have a habit of listening too much and talking too little in the presence of others. It is always safe to remain in the "third person" to avoid conflicts over viewpoints, personalities, or thoughts. With this in mind I get the constant perception from you face of someone deep in thought. Are you thinking a lot at these moments? You ask me to clarify responses; is it to reinforce your thoughts? Your response is much greater in conversations that avoid expressions of personal thoughts. No wonder that I perceive your face sometimes as emotionless. A person who listens a lot to be neutral in conversation can also express neutral facial expressions for the same reason. Others, who can't detect facial expressions as positive or negative, are left up in the air as to your viewpoint. I don't like to be uncomfortable around neat people like yourself. Happy Valentines Day.

Love _____ (Your name here),

The best Valentine in the world is sincere expression to others. I just wish to express my thoughts about the extreme communication gaps that exist between people that I've met in Nye Hall.

A more vigorous life

In regard to Kelly Bullis' letter in favor of a UNR marching band, I for one would like to second the motion. A marching band can add immeasurably to the vigor of campus life, as well as providing an additional outlet for the students majoring in music.

My own situation is an example. After "learning the trade" in three high school bands (including the champion Rider High School band in Texas), I served three years in the Army, first with the Sixth Army Headquarters Band at Presidio, and then two years of marching around Europe with the Seventh Army Band and the 61st Army Band. When I came to Nevada as an undergraduate, I was appalled to find that there was no marching band to which I could contribute my hard-earned expertise. Marching and playing the clarinet or saxophone (as I did) is a real trick and one not easily learned. It is something which I could have helped other kids with, but this school did not afford me the opportunity.

As far as the Sagebrush/marching band controversy is concerned, I feel that as a former photo editor of Sagebrush I can see both sides of the issue. But certainly any student association which can afford a snazzy paper like Sagebrush can CERTAINLY afford a snazzy marching band!

Also, horns are not that expensive and many students will probably provide their own.

Santini says NCAA uses 'gestapo' tactics

STEVE MARTARANO

The National Collegiate Athletic Association, the body which governs most college athletics including UNR's, was accused by Nevada Rep. James Santini yesterday of utilizing "Gestapo" tactics in its methods of investigating university wrongdoing.

Santini, who initiated the House Oversight Committee investigation which is currently looking into the NCAA's practices, was at UNR Monday speaking to a journalism class.

"I have never seen an operation work like they do," Santini said of the NCAA. "There are certain rules which govern fair play and the NCAA fails to fall under any of them."

The committee, which began the investigation that Santini terms will be the committee's biggest of 1978, was started two and a half months ago by Santini. In the fall of 1976, UNR's entire athletic program was palced on probation following a misinterpretation of Edgar Jones' high school transcripts. And then this last fall, UNLV's Jerry Tarkanian and his basketball program was placed on two-year probation because of recruiting violations.

"This is much more than a congressman trying to protect his teams," Santini said. "I first began looking into this after reports started circulating back to Washington. But now this has grown into more than UNR or UNLV versus the NCAA. It's of national importance."

Santini said that there is a definite need for a body which controls recruiting. But it is the way in which the NCAA goes about its investigations that Santini is against.

He said, "The NCAA is made up of its president Walter Byers and 11 staff members. Since there are only 11 investigators, certain targets have to be set up."

Santini questioned why big-name schools are rarely under investigation. "Can you imagine if Notre Dame was found guilty of violations?" he said. "Their alumni would storm the gates of Shawnee Mission, Kan. (the site of NCAA headquarters) and drag Byers away. But Nevada is a logical target because of our reputation."

Santini continued, "The methods of the NCAA use is something Henry VIII would be proud of. The whole process works like this; 1) first the school receives a notice saying it is under investigation, 2) then it receives a list of all the allegations against them 3) that is followed by a hearing in which the school representative goes home not knowing what is going on, 4) finally, the NCAA reviews the case and discloses the findings."

Santini said during the course of an investigation none of the NCAA sources are revealed so the school in question has nothing to base its appeal on. Also, after the penalty has been levied, if the school wants to see what the evidence was against them, they must get themselves to NCAA headquarters. Once there, the representative sits in a cubicle looking over the transcripts and tapes which the NCAA based its findings on. An NCAA member is with you at all times and you are not allowed to take any notes.

There are NCAA conventions which are attended by three representatives from each school. Why aren't any of the NCAA methods changed? "There is a Gestapo-like fear," Santini said. "Whoever speaks out magically gets investigated. The intimidation factor is overwhelming."

The hearings are scheduled to begin Feb. 27. The first witness the oversight committee will call is Brent Clarke who was with the NCAA for two years. Santini said, "Clarke quit and left the NCAA because of his own personal concern how it was run. Right now, Clarke is the foundation of our investigation."

"As it stands now, the NCAA does not function from the schools up, but from Shawnee, Kan. down. They (NCAA) are extremely powerful, too powerful for one man—Byers—to handle. We're starting to inch our way upward but we still have about 90 percent of the way to go."

Women win two easily

RON ELLIS

The UNR women's basketball team extended its winning streak to three games by crushing Stanislaus State 94-63 and Lassen College 85-56 last weekend.

The Wolf Pack tied the school scoring record against Stanislaus Saturday despite committing 35 turnovers and losing four players to personal fouls. The Pack used a full-court pressure defense and outstanding shooting from the field (46 percent) to easily outdistance the visiting Warriors.

"We didn't look that sharp today, but our team speed and pressing defense proved to be the difference," said Wolf Pack coach Kaprice Rupp.

Leading the way for UNR was Cindy Rock with 24 points and seven steals and Regina Ratigan with 23 points. Three other players were in double figures as Sue Pierce hit for 14 points, Becci Huddleston had 12, and Kathy Mead added 10. The 6-2 Mead also grabbed 14 rebounds and Pierce chipped in with 11 boards.

The Pack got off to a poor start, leading only 7-6 with five minutes gone in the game. UNR then applied its pressure defense, extended its lead to 45-25 at the half, and were never threatened during the second half.

Assistant coach Cindee Metzger was very pleased with the performance of team captain Pierce. "She played her best game of the season. Her rebounding, defense, and scoring enables us to control the game."

In Friday night's game, the Pack faced Lassen College, which is only a two-year school. Coach Rupp took this opportunity to give her younger players some playing time. Substitutes Joyce Vetter, Lisa Alley, Tricia MacDiamid, and Robin Kindred all had good games as the Pack coasted to the victory.

UNR led by only 10 points, 40-30, at halftime, but completely dominated the second half to win by 29 points.

The Pack's season record now stands at 6-9 with two away games this weekend. The team travels to U.C. Davis for a Friday night game, and then to Hayward State on Saturday.

Pack nine splits opener

STEVE MARTARANO

The UNR baseball team opened its Northern California Baseball Association season Saturday with a doubleheader split against Fresno State on a wet field.

The series was supposed to conclude Sunday, but right before game time, it began pouring and the game was cancelled.

The Pack was shut out in the opener 9-0 as UNR could manage only two singles and a double in the loss. "That game was as if no one had ever played before," Pack coach Barry McKinnon said Monday. "The team was making stupid mistakes like dropping easy fly balls and things. We were tight, afraid to make a mistake."

Because of the poor weather conditions around Reno lately, McKinnon's team had been unable to get on a field a week prior to the Fresno series.

Fresno pitcher Bob Stoddard who McKinnon termed an "excellent pitcher," was just that against UNR. In upping his record to 2-0, Stoddard struck out five while walking nine.

UNR did manage to bounce back the second game and pull out the 4-3 win. The Pack trailed 3-0 going to the top of the seventh and the team's last chance.

But after loading the bases with one out, a run was walked in. Then UNR's second baseman Butch Dayton singled to tie the score and shortstop Rod Murphy also singled to win it.

"The second game was much better played," McKinnon said. "We played better defense and got some excellent relief pitching out of Mike Burnett."

In picking up the win, Burnett tossed three and two-thirds innings of scoreless ball.

The Pack is scheduled to open its home season here Friday against the University of San Francisco but that is based solely on the weather.

St. Mary's dumps UNR

The UNR basketball team's chances at a WCAC title were all but washed away Saturday night in St. Mary's.

It was the opening game of a "must" road trip for the Pack. UNR was defeated 86-76 by the third place Gaels which shoved Reno off the top spot for the first time since conference action began.

Coupled with the weekend wins by the USF Dons, the Pack is now a half game behind USF with a 7-2 conference mark, 16-6 overall.

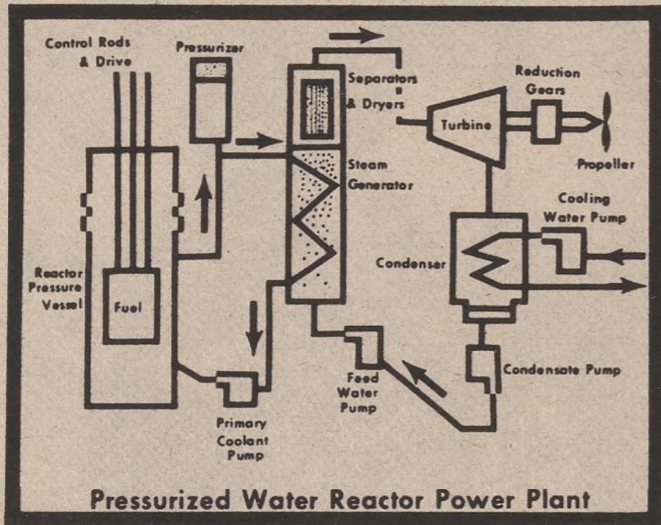

Guard Johnny High and center Edgar Jones led the Pack. High had 20 points while Jones finished with 18. But High could manage to convert only six of 15 field goal tries while the usually hot Mike Gray was colder yet—seven of 24.

The Gaels center Norm Kelly definitely hurt the Pack with his 26 points but the real stinger came in the free throw department. UNR only converted 14 of 21 from the line while St. Mary's hit on 26 of 30, a whopping 12 point difference.

Mathematically, UNR still has a shot at the WCAC crown. The Pack still has road games remaining with Portland, Seattle, Santa Clara and San Francisco. UNR must sweep them to hang on to the thin thread of life left.
