Thoughts for your basic Easter

Ah, Springtime!
Better yet, ah, Easter vacation!
Just when you thought no more school could be handled because of the super weather, a week vacation comes along. Such is the tough life of your American college student.
It's hard for us, too, sitting up here typing this paper watching all the people romp and throw the frisbee around on the quad. But we'll be off, too, with only about seven more issues to crank out before the whole year wraps up.

The idea of a place to drink on the UNR campus, namely a campus bar, has been thrown around quite a bit lately. The arguments are that the students need a regulated place where alcohol can be consumed.

Although many colleges across the country do have campus pubs, I'm skeptical of the idea. The ideology is nice, there should be a place where a student can go and know that he'll see other students in attendance.

But why a pub on campus? This town is not exactly lacking for places to down booze, so the need for that type of establishment should not be of foremost importance.

And who do you think will ultimately end up footing the bill? ASUN will play a major part in it which means the money will come out of your pockets.

I realize that ASUN funds many programs and projects that not all the students take advantage of, but why add one more item.....and an item involving alcohol to boot! Another problem is who will be able to use the pub. A big portion of the undergraduate population of UNR isn't even 21. So even though they'll be helping to foot the bill, access will be off limits.

When you get right down to it, why do people go to bars in the first place? Mainly to get drunk is why. So all the talk of controlled drinking and everything like that just isn't feasible. Who's going to stop some guy from going into this pub and getting plastered on a Tuesday night? There's really no way to supervise responsible drinking, which is one of the big claims to the pub's validity.

With at least four college-type bars less than a mile from UNR, I feel the need to spend our money on such a venture is not needed.

Make the people that are trying to get this together, namely UNRAP and ASUN officials, know your feeling. After all, if it does eventually become reality it'll be the students paying and using it.

Several complaints have come to our office about the obvious fetish on this campus involving students and wet cement.

The poor guys from Buildings and Grounds try putting new cement in, specifically over there by the new student union addition, and in no time at all students have completely ruined the work with their etchings.

One B and G official said, "I don't like to point my finger at anybody, but the closer we get to the dormitories the more of a mess we get."

Come on you guys, grow up a little, huh? Surely your efforts in this fine spring weather can bring about more useful activities than cement etchings.

Take a bow

Editor:

Many thanks to you and your staff for the time and space you devoted to us during 1979's National Library Week.

We see our services as vital to those UNR students who are pursuing a quality education. And, as the campus mouthpiece, you provide our main access to these students, the most logical way for getting our message across.

This week, as in the past, you've come through beautifully for us. Thanks again!!!

Sincerely,

Baseball prose

Editor:

It was nice talking to you again on Wednesday, April 4, after such a long layoff. Unfortunately I can't understand why you have not changed your viewpoints from last fall.

I turned in another article on Monday, April 2, in which I was informed would be placed in the Tuesday, April 3 paper. In our discussion Wednesday I received the questionably objective answer of, "I'll decide what goes in the paper." True you are the editor and have the final decision, but if you don't give this written style a chance, how will you know if it is successful.

By this written style I am talking about an article I wrote on a softball game in which many baseball jargons and adjectives were used, and the game, though apparently meaningless, was written in a dramatic prose. I purposely did that to enlighten the readers of this NEWSPAPER. You, Mr. Martarano, claim this is useless, but why the full page articles on intramural basketball which are not even written in a dramatic, enlightening style.

This style, though not journalism "cookbook," has been written for other papers, specifically one paper is The Boulder City News, which served a community of 15,000 plus people, and was a success. If you never place these articles in the paper how will you know if the students will enjoy it or not?

THE UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA AT RENO

Campus pub is still an issue

Sharon Macdonald

A campus pub, an issue that has been under consideration for past years at UNR, is being looked at by ASUN government again.

Dave Ritch, newly elected ASUN president, commented on the possibilities of having a student pub on campus. "Since a lot of students have a lack of transportation on campus, the popularity for a student pub is apparent. A suggested location has been the snack bar which the Home Economics Department is facilitating for renovation," he said.

UNR's current alcohol policy doesn't prohibit a drinking establishment, according to Pete Perriera, assistant dean of students. Commented Perriera, "All we need is President Crowley's permission."

President Joseph Crowley said nothing has been done about the issue of a pub on campus. "Since it would entail location, support and funding a concrete proposal would have to be on my desk before I made a decision regarding a pub at UNR," Crowley commented.

Approximately 33 percent of the students at UNR are under 21, according to an updated enrollment report for spring 1979. A majority of these students live in dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

"A lot of issues are involved," Perriera said. "There would have to be enforcement of the state laws regarding the legal drinking age. It would not be like a bar or saloon; it would be more than just place to get drunk."

An editorial in the Dec. 7, 1978, Reno Evening Gazette, brought up the controversial issue of having a student pub on the UNR campus. It was suggested in the article "that establishing an on-campus pub might be a way to promote an alcohol awareness program at the university." The editorial also mentioned that, "A campus pub could be a constructive part of the educational process."

Mike Looney, project director for UNRAP (UNR's Alcohol Program), had a positive attitude concerning a pub at UNR. "Our primary purpose is to look at alcohol and drug abuse. Since 90 percent of students drink, a pub on the UNR campus could make for less abusive drinking and potential for a nice community place to socialize," he said. He went on to say he surveyed universities across the country and "25 percent of them sold and served alcohol on campus."

There have been no definite plans or resolutions regarding a place for a pub on campus yet. ASUN President Dave Ritch commented, "UNR has the highest on-campus population of the state so there is good chance of success for a pub. Most important there should be a place at UNR where all students can go and enjoy themselves."

Exchange program benefits UNR students

Scott Mortimore

The National Student Exchange (NSE) program has offered benefits and opportunities that are sometimes not available at a home campus, according to the six students currently attending UNR through the program.

"It's great. It gives me a chance to get away and meet other people and see another part of the country," Huey Reed, 21-year-old marketing major from Boise, Idaho, said. He has been at UNR since January and will attend through the current spring semester. Next fall, Reed will attend New Mexico State University at Las Cruces on the last leg of his exchange with NSE.

Reed especially liked the old touch UNR's campus has. "Reno's okay, but is congested. It's neat that the campus is so close to the city but is completely isolated — it's a completely different atmosphere," he said.

There are currently two students attending UNR on the NSE program who come from the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, a campus with over 16,000 students.

Catherine Eckl, a 20-year-old social services major is one of those students and has enjoyed the shift to a smaller university. "It wasn't like I was just another number in a class of 200 people. I've met some really good people and loved the personalized attention from teachers." She noted a change for the better in her grades which seems to be a characteristic trait of most exchange students.

Eckl, who is very attached to the West, spent three days driving to Reno with her father. "people out here are just as friendly and I'm going to hate to go home," she said in a sweet, southern drawl.

"I like it a lot more than I did at first," she said in reference to the Reno area. "I flipped out at first at the culture shock with the casinos and traffic, but really like being near the mountains."

"I don't think people are half as supportive as far as sports are concerned out here," she said. But then again, Alabama has one of the finest football teams in the country under Paul "Bear" Bryant and also has a fine basketball team.

The only flaws she could find with UNR was the parking, health services and that old buildings in the quad are being demolished. "But," she said with a sincere smile, "I'm really glad I came. I met some people I'll never forget."

Beaming with southern hospitality, Paige Dunlavy, a 20-year-old special education major, comes on with the appearance of a true southern belle. She, too, is from the University of Alabama.

"When I first got here, I counted the days until I would go back, but now I wish I could stay longer," she said. "It has all worked out for the better," she said in reference to her stay at UNR.

"When I first came out, I found it hard to adjust to Reno, but I think it will be harder to adjust when I go back," she said. Dunlavy is on an exchange with UNR for only the spring semester.

"This is the wildest place I've ever been in my life in comparison to Alabama," Dunlavy said. "I've loved it. There is just no comparison with the mountains and scenery." She found Alabama is much more conservative than Nevada.

Dunlavy and Eckl both noted participation for the NSE program is much more competitive. This year at UNR there were 13 applicants and all 13 have been accepted for NSE. All but three of the applicants received their first choice for an out-of-state college.

The students found it beneficial to see another part of the country and study and mingle with the other people and their ways of life. Robert G. Kinney, head of NSE at UNR, is hoping to see a larger turnout for the program in the future. "It's a great program," he said. "It offers students to extend their studies to fields that may not be available at UNR while seeing another part of the country and meeting other people."

Basque series continues

"The Witch's Advocate" by Gustav Henningsen is one of three new books to be published in the next few years by the University of Nevada Press. They will be added to the press's existing series on the Basques.

Based on papers of the Spanish Inquisition of 1612, "The Witch's Advocate" documents a minority view held by one of three inquisitors involved in witchcraft trials during that period. His name was Alfonso de Salazar.

Salazar was an inquisitor who dissented from the majority judgment of the guilt of those tried for witchcraft. In his writings, he tells how many confessions during the trials were later retracted.

The document was discovered a few years ago in the archives of Madrid by the Dane Gustav Henningsen, who compiled Salazar's research.

Nicholas Cady of the University Press says the report showed how witchcraft was a craze, existing in the minds of the people, and reveals Alfonso de Salazar as quite the humanist.

Jon Onativia and William Jacobsen have also written a revised teaching book. It was used in conjunction with a radio program in Spain to teach the Guipuzcoan dialect of Basque. This grammar book is to be released next spring.

Due for a 1979 fall release will be "Beltran: Basque Sheepman of the American West" by Beltran Paris as told to William A. Douglass.

Nicholas Cady and Cam Sutherland of the University Press, arrange a display of historical books on Nevada.

Wright brothers' photos

A collection of rare photographs of the Wright Brothers' experiments in flight is now available for borrowing from the Government Publications collection of Getchell Library.

The photographs, taken by the Wright Brothers between 1898 and 1911, represent both the successes and failures of those aviation pioneers. The Wrights were avid photographers and attempted to visually document every step of their work.

This collection, titled "Photographs by the Wright Brothers," was assembled from a set of 303 glass plate negatives acquired by the Library of Congress in 1949 from the estate of Orville Wright. All but two of the negatives have been reproduced and placed into five categories: gliders, 1900-1911; powered flights, 1903-1915; portraits and informal photographs; Kitty Hawk and other locales; and memorabilia.

The photos have also been reproduced on microfiche, a system by which material is reduced in size and printed on transparent cards for viewing. This means that while the collection is available for normal borrowing, it is best to plan to look at the photos in the library at one of the available microfiche readers.

The photos are accompanied by a descriptive pamphlet listing exact information for each shot, along with details about the collection as a whole.

Chevy Blazer bombed at Nye

Three homemade explosives detonated in the Nye Hall fee parking lot March 29, cracking the windshield and a headlight of a jeep, university police said. No one was injured.

Nye Hall resident Chris Heitman said he heard an explosion and ignored it. When he heard another, he looked out a window and saw his blue 1974 Chevy Blazer smoking. Several other residents heard the explosions.

Apparently there were no witnesses, but police said they believed the explosives were thrown from a sixth or seventh floor window of the dorm. There were no suspects a few hours after the incident.

University Police Chief Keith A. Shumway said, "They're not manufacturing bombs in Nye Hall." Police said the explosives were small cans of gunpowder ignited with fuses.

University Housing Director Shirley Morgan said that disciplinary action ranging from fines to suspension will result if the person causing the incident is found.

SAS/CPAs dine

The third annual banquet of the UNR Student Accounting Society (SAS) and the Northern Nevada Society of CPAs will be held at 5:30 p.m. at Harrah's on Tuesday, April 24. CPA certificates will be presented at the banquet.

Dr. A.N. Mosich, CPA, of University of Southern California, will speak on the "Professional School of Accountancy."

A spokesman for SAS said the banquet will include a no-host bar and a prime rib dinner. He added that guests are welcome and reservations may be made by calling the UNR Accounting Department at 784-4028 before April 18.

Only editors apply

Applications for editorships next year on three university publications are currently being accepted. Editors are needed for Sagebrush, Artemisia and Brushfire. In addition, a Brushfire art editor and an advertising manager are being sought. Deadline for filing is 5 p.m. April 19. Contact Kathy in the ASUN office for information and applications.

On the move

Eleven UNR students have been chosen to attend nine out-of-state universities under the National Student Exchange program.

The 11 students were chosen at NSE's annual conference held March 21-23 in El Paso, Texas. The program allows students to attend an out-of-state university at in-state costs for one year.

Students leaving this fall and the campuses they will attend are: Stephanie Ball, Rutgers University; Lisa Barkley, Oregon State University;

Gayle Brooks, University of Oregon; Robert Long, University of Oregon; Vivica Meador, University of South Florida in Tampa; Scott Mortimore, University of Hawaii-Manoa in Honolulu; Mark Paoli, University of Idaho; Wendy Pearson, University of Hawaii-Hilo; Bradley Port, Illinois State University; Barry Reiss, University of Massachusetts-Amherst; and Mary Tippin, University of Oregon.

Navajo art

Franklin Kahn, a nationally recognized Navajo artist will be displaying some of his paintings and art work this Friday, April 6, at the Center for Religion and Life — from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Kahn recently participated in the 27th National Prayer Breakfast in Washington DC, where he chanted a Navajo prayer. Much of his art reflects his belief that religion should unite all human beings, not just bring them together in groups.

Thursday, Kahn will be the guest speaker at a banquet honoring the tribal elders at the Reno-Sparks Indian colony in Sparks. Friday, he will visit the Stewart Indian School in Carson City. His appearance locally is sponsored by the Baha'is of Northern Nevada, and the Nevada Council for Religion and Arts.

Scholarships

The American College Scholarship Program is taking applications for its awards. Forty grants of $500 each will be awarded nationwide to persons planning to attend colleges or universities in the fall of 1979.

Connie Bernhardt of UNR's Career Planning and Placement Office said her office is responsible for nominating a UNR student. He or she will be a graduate, undergraduate or high school senior who will attend UNR in the fall of 1979. The nominee, however, isn't guaranteed a scholarship.

Ms. Bernhardt explained all nominees are judged by a national panel of distinguished educators. They choose students on the basis of academic achievement. She added financial need is not a factor in selecting the winners.

Application deadline is April 23, and the panel will make its final decision June 1. Winners will have the $500 award credited to their accounts at their respective universities or colleges for the fall term, 1979.

Student art

The annual Department of Art Student Exhibition will be held April 21-May 18, in the Church Fine Arts' north gallery.

The contest is open to all currently enrolled students. A $100 prize will be awarded to the first place entry, $75 for second prize and $50 for third prize.

Entry forms are available in the Art Department office, Room 132, Church Fine Arts. There will be a $1 fee for each entry, with a limit of five entries. The deadline is April 18.

The exhibition is open to the public.

persons 20 years old and younger. The actual number of gonorrhea cases is probably five times this rate, so about 1,500 teens in the Reno-Sparks area had gonorrhea in 1978. And gonorrhea is only one of the sexually-transmitted diseases that people get.

April is "National V.D. Awareness Month," and is an attempt to raise community awareness about venereal disease in order to prevent V.D. when possible and to reduce the consequences of undiagnosed and untreated V.D.

As editor of your school newspaper, you can help reduce the amount of sexually-transmitted diseases going around your school by taking some action. You can do this by any of the following:

1. contacting us for an interview about venereal diseases and how to recognize and prevent them, then printing a story in your school newspaper based on the interview;

2. encourage letters to the editor (you) soliciting students' ideas about how to reduce V.D., and then forwarding results to us so we can help solve this problem with the help of the teen community; and

3. urging teachers to cover the subject in class so that students will be informed.

Again, our goal is to stop the V.D. epidemic in the community, and you and your school newspaper can help solve this problem. So, take some action and give us a call.

Thanks for your help.

Jeffersonian Postscript

More anti-draft thoughts

Paul Strickland

Within the rising crescendo of voices favoring a renewed draft, one often hears the theme that a volunteer army is a mercenary army — that a person who joined up because he thought a military career would pay well and offer him opportunities for advancement is a mercenary soldier.

Actually, throughout most of its history, the United States has had a volunteer or non-conscript army. From 1789 to 1862, from 1865 to 1917 and from 1919 to 1940, the United States was defended exclusively by volunteers. Is it not an insult to their memory to define them as mercenaries, especially those who fought during the War of 1812, the first parts of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War? Moreover, the system presently in effect is a de facto volunteer army with draft machinery in deep standby status.

A volunteer army in a democratic America is definitely not a mercenary army. A mercenary army, properly defined, is an army of foreigners serving for pay only and feeling no primary loyalty to the host country. The members of America's volunteer army, composed of its own citizens who are serving both out of a sense of patriotism and a natural, honorable desire to advance in their careers (which everyone in government service or private employment wants to do), are no more mercenaries than policemen and firemen. Policemen and firemen risk their lives almost every day — and sometimes are shot at — in their effort to protect the safety of the public. Do they get called mercenaries because they competed for their jobs in a free economy job market instead of being drafted?

The "mercenary" tag is an insult to enlistees in the present-day de facto volunteer army. To repeat the designation borders on the unpatriotic, because it contributes to the low morale in the volunteer army and to lower enlistment rates among those who are considering volunteering.

Some people claim the volunteer army is a failure, and point to the fact that in recent months some or all of the services have been unable to meet their quotas of enlistees. These critics neglect to mention almost simultaneous reports in the San Francisco Chronicle and in the U.S. News and World Report that more of the people who are in the army already are signing up for second and third terms of service. They neglect to mention how expensive it is, under the draft, to train hordes of people who can't wait to get out when their required two years are up.

In 1917, there were also some who called the volunteer army a failure. But Sen. McKellar of Tennessee replied to them:

It is claimed by some of our so-called military experts that the volunteer system has been a failure. We have tried it in five wars, and we have won all of those wars. But they then reply that those wars could have been won easier and with less loss of life and property with a conscript system. Oh,

Mr. President, it is easy to pick flaws after the fact, but it is the result that counts; and the result has always been under the volunteer system we have had the highest success, and after the war was over our soldiers have passed into peaceful pursuits of man, as is proper under our system of government.

(Congressional Record, April 24, 1917, p. 1018)

Sen. McKellar went on to say that the draft — conscription — violates the traditions of the English-speaking world and is essentially despotic or Prussian:

We are asked to leave the traditions and the history of the Anglo-Saxon race for the first time since William the Conqueror went to England in 1066 in the matter of the formation of an army, and we are asked to pattern after the military despotisms of Germany and of Russia and of Austria; and even such despotisms as those never took the services of a boy 19 years of age.

(Ibid., p. 1021)

Contrary to the general public belief, the draft is not opposed exclusively by left-wing extremists. People of such varying views as Barry Goldwater, Ayn Rand, Sen. Mark Hatfield, George McGovern and Karl Hess opposed the draft when it was still operational, and their opposition can probably be counted on again if moves are made to restore it.

The essential danger of a draft is that it is giving the government a blank check on the reserves of manpower in a country. As such it makes war more likely: it makes it easier for a government to get men onto a battlefield in great numbers. With a draft a government does not have to consider how popular or well thought out a foreign policy is, because it doesn't have to bother to solicit volunteers. On the other hand, as Ayn Rand has pointed out, "a volunteer army is one of the best protectors of the peace." To get volunteers, the government has to convince large numbers of young people that its foreign policy is rational and just.

If the United States is going to fight for the preservation of the democracy of Finland against the USSR, to liberate Hungary from the USSR or to liberate Chile, then American young men and women should volunteer for service. If, however, the United States institutes a draft and then proposes to fight in behalf of the Red Chinese murderers against the Soviet Russian murderers, or for the Yugoslavian despotism against the Soviet despotism or for the Saudi Arabian despotism against the Iranian despotism, then the response of American youth can only be, "Hell, no! We won't go!"

The doctor did it

Reno Little Theater's next production will be "Murder Once Removed," a mystery drama by Irving Neiman. The play is a chilling story about a doctor who tries to commit the proverbial crime.

Dr. Ronald Cato has been carrying on his father's medical practice, and he has also been carrying on an illicit affair with Lisa Manning, who is the wife of one of his patients — Walter Manning. After Mr. Manning begins to suspect that an affair is going on, he has a private detective investigate the doctor's background — and some rather suspicious details are uncovered.

Manning then confronts the doctor with the high number of damning details from the past, and the doctor tries to dismiss them all as just gossip talk. When that clearly fails to satisfy Manning, the doctor decides that the only way to silence Manning is to murder him. This he proceeds to do, and he does it in such a clever way that the attention of the police is directed towards another patient as the prime murder suspect. The very clever ending is not revealed until the last few lines of the play, and the audience will feel the suspense build as the circumstantial evidence piles up against an innocent young man.

The cast includes William McElrath, Anne McElrath, Joe Segal, Dale Donaton, David Tobin, Odette Moberly and Dana Winkelman. Blythe Bulmer, the first lady of Reno area theater, will be the director. Blythe says that she is interested in doing this play "as an exercise in sheer entertainment."

The play will open on April 6 at Reno Little Theater (Seventh and N. Sierra streets, Reno), and will continue on April 7, 8, 12, 13 and 14. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m., 7:30 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $3.50, students and seniors: $2.50.

Reservations are suggested. The box office will be open from 1 to 4 p.m. and the number is 329-0661.

Ron Ellis

UNR presented its first Corporate Service Award to two Nevada firms this year — Harrah's and the Del Webb Corporation.

UNR President Joseph Crowley presented the special plaques bearing the University Seal to Mead Dixon, chairman of the board of Harrah's, and Robert Johnson, chairman of the board and president of Del E. Webb Corporation. The presentation was made at a benefit performance for the university of the Broadway musical, "Hello Dolly," Wednesday, April 4, at Sahara Reno's Opera House Showroom.

Crowley said the awards were "designed to honor corporations in Nevada that have made a significant positive impact on Nevada, as a whole, and especially those who have shown an interest in higher education in the state."

Both corporations have a history of support toward the university, Crowley noted. He pointed to the annual Wolf Club Athletic Benefit hosted by Harrah's and the numerous benefits Del Webb has been responsible for, both at UNR and the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

Harrah's and Del Webb were also major contributors to the "Save the Stars" campaign in the fall of 1976 which rescued the Fleishmann Atmospherium/Planetarium from financial collapse.

Upon receiving the award, Harrah's Dixon said, "I am pleased that Harrah's is one of the first recipients of the UNR Corporate Service Award."

"I am pleased, too, that the award is designed to honor those corporations that have contributed to the growth and prominence of our state," Dixon said. "We are proud to carry on the tradition of our founder, Bill Harrah, and to continue our support of the university.

"With all the people of this state, we share pride in the University of Nevada System and in our community. The two are inseparable."

Johnson of Sahara Reno said Del Webb Corporation was most appreciative and honored to receive the award.

"Del Webb Hotels have always been a strong supporter of the university system of Nevada. We consider it a valuable investment," Johnson said. "It is through a strong university system that we strengthen our business community and are able to offer a variety of beneficial customer services."

"Many of our employees have been or currently are part- or full-time students at the university, and through a better education they become more valuable employees and are able to improve their chosen careers," Johnson added.

The benefit performance of "Hello Dolly" following the presentation was hosted by the Sahara Reno as part of its contribution to UNR's Corporate Support Program. It is a fund-raising project designed to provide private support and assistance to academic projects at the university.

The performance, which cost $50 per person, raised about $35,000 for the program, according to UNR's director of development Gene Brandt.

"It was both a privilege and honor for Del Webb's Sahara Reno to participate in this most significant fund-raising event," Johnson. "And it was rewarding to see the overwhelming response and support of this first-time event by members of our community."

Johnson added Del Webb Corporation was sincerely proud to have played a small part in making it become a reality.

Talented docs

Medical laboratory professionals, highly trained people whose analyses contribute to the detection, diagnosis, treatment and study of disease, will be honored April 8-14, National Medical Laboratory Week.

Medical laboratory personnel include pathologists, medical technologists, medical laboratory technicians and laboratory assistants. In laboratories they analyze blood, body fluids and tissue samples for evidence of disease or infection. They may be specialists in such areas as hematology, chemistry, nuclear medicine, microbiology and histology.

They are employed in laboratories found in hospitals, clinics, research centers, universities and doctors' offices, where they work hand-in-hand with the physician to ensure the accuracy of a diagnosis.

UNR offers a complete program in medical technology through the Department of Laboratory Medicine and Pathology.

Students who plan to pursue a career in medical technology enter the university as pre-majors for two years, during which the pre-requisite courses in the sciences and liberal arts are taken. In the second semester of the sophomore year applications are accepted for admission to the medical technology major beginning in the junior year.

Throughout the first three semesters of the major, the student's time is devoted primarily to courses in clinical laboratory science and laboratory technique, given by the medical technology faculty. The final semester consists of 6 months of supervised training in an affiliated hospital laboratory. There students work alongside practicing technologists while experiencing the actual day-to-day atmosphere and routine. During this time students acquire understanding of the relationships between normal and pathological conditions and the laboratory test results, as well as integration and application of skills.

Upon successful completion of the program, the student is awarded a Bachelor of Science degree and is eligible to take any one of the several national certification examinations.

For further information about the program, contact Program Director, Medical Technology Program, Mackay Science Building, University of Nevada-Reno, or call 784-4846.

CAREY ON THE BRINK*Coach in a dilemma

Chris Healy

While Oklahoma State scrambles through a list of candidates for their coaching job one can only think about what is going through Jim Carey's mind. Being the basketball coach of a team that is losing all five starters does not seem to be something he relishes.

With UNR's tough opening month next season against the likes of UNLV, Kansas, Utah, Utah State and North Carolina State, you can see why Carey would be quick to jump at an offer to go to another school.

Oklahoma State would not be a step up even though they are in the Big-8 conference. That conference has been down in basketball the last few seasons. Kansas and Missouri are having decent recruiting years but they usually are the only ones that do in that conference.

If Carey stays at UNR, which at this moment seems likely, then he will be faced with a big rebuilding job. He has already done that once at UNR and to go through that here would just be retracing old steps. Carey has a good reputation in basketball circles as coach able to turn a program around. He has done it at UNR already.

If Carey were to take a similar post at another school then he would be afforded the luxury of having a couple of mediocre years in another rebuilding effort. If he has those years at UNR then his reputation as a program builder would be tarnished.

Another factor to consider is the bad feelings many of the Wolf Pack fans are developing toward Carey. Many of them, showing their loyalty to UNR through booster club donations, wonder if Carey really gives a hoot about Reno. As one booster said, "Every time a job opening occurs he starts applying for it. We've been good to him why doesn't he show us some loyalty?"

Last year Carey was offered the head job at Wyoming but turned it down because he still had a good team coming back. Things are different this year though because Edgar, Fly and High are departing for shots at professional ball.

COACH JIM CAREY

The growing disgust with Carey's "lack of loyalty" will make the powerful UNR boosters quick with the thumb if Carey starts losing ball games as expected at the start of next season. Another booster said, "He's not the only one who would like to part company."

So goes it. The volatile career of Jim Carey continues. He is good copy.

Pack's longest homestand

The Wolf Pack baseball team opens up its longest homestand of the year tomorrow when the University of Pacific comes to town for a Northern California Baseball Association series.

UNR, 15-15 after Tuesday's 13-8 dubbing of Sacramento State, will play six games over the next five days. The first three games of the series will be NCBA games while the following three will be non-conference affairs. Two of those three will also be played against UOP and the other will be with Southern Oregon.

Righthander Greg Young will pitch the opening game of the series on Saturday at 2:30. There will be a double header at noon Sunday to complete the conference phase of the road trip. The Pack then plays UOP in single games on Monday and Tuesday and then they play Southern Oregon on Wednesday.

If the Wolf Pack wants to get back into the hunt for the conference title then they will be forced to sweep the three conference games and hope that San Jose State, 6-0 in second half play, will start losing. The Pack, 1-5 in the second half, trails San Jose by five games with only 12 left to play.

UNR softball team faces grueling schedule

The UNR softball team, riding a five-game winning streak, travels to powerful Sacramento State for a double-header today then comes home to play two games with U.S. International University tomorrow. The Wolf Pack women then begin a grueling road trip on Monday, playing seven games in four days.

The journey begins with a double-header at Humboldt State on Monday, and a single game Tuesday at Southern Oregon State College in Medford. The Pack then travels to Corvallis to play Oregon State and the University of Oregon on Wednesday, before venturing into Portland to take on Portland State and Oregon College on Thursday.

According to Pack coach Olena Plummer, today's opponent, Sacramento State, is a "very good team." The Hornets split two games with Cal-Berkeley, a team that swept the Pack 1-0 and 4-1 in Reno's first games of the season. Last year the Pack was defeated by the Hornets in snowy weather at home by a score of 7-6 in 10 innings.

Reno has a weak .224 batting average but has been hitting well lately. Leading the Pack in the hitting department is shortstop Sue Williams at .400. She also has two triples and leads the team in RBIs with 10. First baseman Joanne Culverhouse is batting .300 while pitcher-right fielder Carlinda Poe is at .278. Although Darlene Roque has only six at bats as a non-starter, the tall freshman has collected six RBIs.

The Pack more than makes up for its poor batting by its outstanding pitching. The team earned run average is 0.78, which means the Pack is allowing less than one earned run a game by its opponents. Debbie Flateau is 2-2 with a 0.50 ERA, while Poe is 3-1 and 0.88.

After the Pack's long road trip, the team has a week off before it is host to the UNR Invitational Tournament. Eighteen teams will take part in the event, which begins Thursday, April 19, at Idlewild Park. Besides UNR, the teams entered are: American River College, Sonoma State, Northern Arizona, Weber State, Oregon Institute of Technology, USF, University of Oregon, Humboldt State, Lewis and Clark College, Chico State, Mendicino College, Southern Oregon State College, University of Arizona, Cal-Davis, Portland State University, San Francisco State and Cal-Berkeley.

"After April's over," Plummer said with a sigh, "I'm going to celebrate."
